PREFACE.

THIS work, originally prepared by Mr. WILLIAM G. WEBSTER, with the co-operation of the late Professor CHAUNCEY A. GOODRICH of Yale College, was first published in 1856. While in a general way it was designed for use in the family, the office, and the counting-room, and among all who might desire to obtain a comprehensive dictionary of small size and cost, it was, at the same time, framed with a particular reference to the wants of students in our colleges, academies, and other advanced schools, and also of those engaged in private study.

The present revision has been made by Mr. WILLIAM A. WHEELER, one of the editors of the revised edition of Webster's Quarto Dictionary issued in 1864. Keeping in view the plan of the abridgment as just stated, he has not only brought the work into full conformity with the revised Quarto, but has considerably enlarged its scope, and proportionally increased its usefulness.

In its present form, this volume comprises a copious and careful selection of English words in actual use at the present day, shows their correct orthography and pronunciation, gives their etymology in a concise manner, and exhibits their various shades of signification by means of formal definition conveyed for the most part in brief descriptive sentences or clauses. In some thousands of cases, a list of Synonyms, printed in a separate paragraph and in smaller type, is subjoined to the definitions; and, in addition, synonymous words, to the number of about seventeen hundred, are carefully discriminated in nearly six hundred distinct articles. Wood-cuts, selected and engraved expressly for this work, have been freely introduced, not as mere embellishments, but for the purpose of leading to a better understanding of the terms under which they occur. The Introduction contains a concise and authentic exposition of the subject of English orthoëpy, a very full collection of Rules for Spelling, and an explanatory list of Prefixes and Suffixes, with appropriate examples of their use. The character and range of the Appendix will be best understood by referring to the various Tables included in it, or by an inspection of the Contents on page v. Its leading object, however, is to add to the value of the work as a popular manual of reference by presenting in a form adapted for ready consultation pronouncing vocabularies of proper names, and brief explanations of certain other matters concerning which information is often desired by readers and writers of every class.

Such are the chief features of the work, which, as it now stands, revised in all its departments, and enriched by many important additions, considerably exceeds its original limits, the size of the page having been somewhat increased, and ninety pages added to the number contained in the former edition.

It is believed that this Dictionary can be advantageously used as a text book for systematic instruction in the English language, and that it will serve as a faithful guide to the self-teaching scholar engaged in the study of words. The preliminary "Principles of Pronunciation" will furnish materials for a course of exercises in English orthoëpy, including the analysis of the elementary sounds, the various ways of representing them, the effect of accent on the vowel sounds, and the like; while, under each head, the pupil can prepare, with the aid of the Vocabulary, extended lists of illustrative examples. This mode of study may be occasionally varied by taking up at pleasure certain portions of the Vocabulary, and referring the words embraced therein to the several principles which they exemplify. A like use can be made of the "Rules for Spelling"; and the student who has familiarized himself with these rules, and has also had the benefit of sufficient practice in writing out lists of examples, will be surprised to find how soon he has become an adept in the difficult art of orthography. The list of Prefixes and Suffixes, taken in connection with the etymologies given in the body of the work, will enable a learner to investigate the structure of English words, to become acquainted with the significance of their constituent parts, and to trace the connection of their primary, derivative, and metaphorical senses, a distinct knowledge of which is often the condition of their appropriate use. The interest and instructiveness of exercises in etymological analysis, and their importance as a means of disciplining the mind to thoughtful habits can not be gainsaid. "There are cases," says Coleridge, "in which more knowledge of more value may be conveyed by the history of a word than by the history of a campaign." And again, as being of "especial aid . . . in forming a habit of reflection," he says, "Accustom yourself to reflect on the words you use, hear, or read, their birth, derivation, and history; for, if words are not things, they are living powers, by which the things of most importance to mankind are actuated, combined, and humanized." It is suggested to teachers that a certain number of prefixes or suffixes be assigned as a lesson for study, and that the pupil be required to ascertain and explain the literal meaning of the examples appended to them, including the root as well as the formative syllables. Additional examples may be taken directly from the Dictionary, or from the spelling-book or the reading-book, as may seem most advisable. Other useful modes of instruction will occur to the skillful teacher. The lists of Synonyms, and the articles in which synonyms are distinguished, may be made available as models to be imitated in the collection and discrimination of words of the same general signification — a practice highly valuable as leading to a ready command of language, and to clearness and precision in its use.

In the arrangement of words in the Dictionary, while a strictly alphabetical order is followed, words of the same form — whether etymologically related or not — are not treated in distinct articles, but the definition of one immediately follows that of another in the same paragraph, being separated from it only by a dash; as, "ĀB'O-RIG'I-NAL, a. First or primitive. — n. A first or original inhabitant." This has been done to save space, but the inspector will find that facility of reference has not been sacrificed to the necessity for compression.

In submitting this work to the judgment of the public, the Editor indulges the hope that the protracted labor and unremitting care he has bestowed upon it have resulted in the production of a Dictionary which will be found to answer all the purposes for which it is intended.

S, S, soft or vocal , like z , as in	HAS, AMUSE, ROSEATE.	ZH, ZH, as in	VISION (vĭzh'un).

. When one letter of an improper diphthong, or of a triphthong, is marked, it is to be taken as representing the sound of the combination, and the letter or letters which are not marked are to be regarded as silent: as in āim, clēan, cēil, pēople, rēute, sōul, jōurnal, tōw, &c. The combined letters ce, ci, sci, se, si, or ti, occurring before a vowel in a syllable immediately preceded by an accented syllable, are generally equivalent to sh; as in ocean, ceta/ceous, so/cial, logi/cian, suspi/cion, auspi/cious, con/science, nau/ceous, controver/sial, dissen/sion, ini/tial, ora/tion, feti/tious, &c. Such syllables are not always respelled, as, in general, they will naturally be pronounced correctly by an English speaker. But in all exceptional, doubtful, or difficult cases, the appropriate respelling is used.

. For an explanation of foreign sounds occurring in the Dictionary see pp. 502-504.

RESPELLING FOR PRONUNCIATION. — (1.) In respelling the French an, en, on, &c., the letters ng are not to be pronounced themselves, being designed simply to mark the vowel as nasal, that is, as pronounced through both the nose and the mouth at the same time. — (2.) The respelling of a word when a number of related words follow, applies to all of them down to some other word which is respelled.

ACCENT. — The principal accent is denoted by a heavy mark; the secondary, by a lighter mark; as in SU'PERINTEND'ENT. In the division of words into syllables, these marks, besides performing their proper office, supply the place of the hyphen, except in some compound and derivative words.

PRINCIPLES OF PRONUNCIATION,

WITH EXPLANATIONS OF THE KEY.

VOWELS.

§ 1. The vowel sounds in monosyllables and accented syllables are marked in the Dictionary by pointing the letters according to the Key. Each of the vowels will now be considered under three heads; namely, its regular long, and short, and its occasional sounds, as heard in monosyllables and in accented and unaccented syllables.

I. VOWELS IN MONOSYLLABLES AND ACCENTED SYLLABLES.

A.

§ 2. Regular long sound, marked \bar{A} , \bar{a} , as in ale; heard also in pāin, dāy, gāol, gāuge, āye, breāk, veil, whey, &c.

NOTE. — This sound of a is in most cases diphthongal, having a slight “vanish” in \bar{e} annexed to its “radical” or initial sound, as in pay, where the y may be regarded as representing the vanish. Writers are not agreed as to the nature of the radical part, some considering it to be the sound of short e, while others assert that it is a distinct, though very similar, element, being like the other long vowels as compared with their true corresponding short sounds, of a slightly less open quality. — See § 11, and § 8, NOTE.

§ 3. Regular short sound, marked \check{A} , \check{a} , as in add; heard also in plāid, bāde, &c.

NOTE. — This is a distinct element from the long a. Like the other shut or stopped vowels (\check{e} , \check{i} , \check{o} , \check{u} , $\check{ö}$), its sound is exceedingly short, and has a certain abrupt, explosive character, which is hardly found in any language but our own. With respect to its position in the scale of sounds, it is a palatal vowel, intermediate between \bar{a} and \check{e} , the tongue being raised higher than for \bar{a} , and not so high as for \check{e} .

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF A.

§ 4. Sound of a before r, in such words as air, care, fare, bear, prayer, parent, marked \hat{A} , \hat{a} . The letter e has the same sound in a few words, such as there, where, their, heir, &c.

Two errors in opposite extremes are here to be avoided: 1. That of the vulgar, who pronounce where, whar; bear, bar; careful, carful, &c.; 2. That of some among the educated classes, who pronounce pair, parent, &c., as if spelt pay'er, pay'reut, &c.

Some have considered the a in care as a distinct element; this, however, is not admitted by Smart, who maintains that it is our long a in fate, and owes all its peculiarity to the subsequent r. Such, also, is the statement of Dr Webster and most English orthoëpists. The sound of r in these words is what Smart calls a “guttural vibration,” — a sound which he represents by ur, and Dr Webster by er. In care we touch lightly on the \bar{a} sound (the radical alone, without the vanish; see § 2), and then pass fully and strongly into the guttural vibration ($\bar{e}a'$ ur or $\bar{e}a'$ er), drawing the two as closely as possible into the same syllable — so closely that Smart (not aiming at philosophical exactness) speaks of the r as actually blending with the previous vowel. In like manner, parent is sounded $\bar{p}a'$ ur-ent, or $\bar{p}a'$ -er-ent; and fairy has the sound of $\bar{f}a'$ er-y, as the word was actually spelt by Spenser in his “Faery Queen.” Smart refers, also, with approbation, to another mode of identifying the sound in question; namely, that of prolonging our short e before r. Thus, ther (with the e as in thēn), drawn out into long quantity, gives us there ($\bar{th}âr$); and er (the first syllable in error) gives us ere or $\bar{e}'er$ ($\bar{a}r$). Thus, in the view here presented, the initial sound should always be that of a in fate (the radical without the vanish; see § 2), though the final impression upon the ear is that of an open or broad sound, in consequence of the “opening power” of the r. In primitive words like flare, lair, pair, and the others mentioned above, it is very important not to dwell so long on the a as to make it diphthongal; for, if the close vanishing element of the vowel is retained, it is impossible for the open r to blend with it in the same syllable. But in derivative words like flayer, layer, payer, it is essential to preserve the terminational sound of the a, in order to keep up a distinction between the two classes.

Some, however, especially in New England, give these words a slightly different sound; namely, that of our short a before the r, in air, pronounced $\bar{a}er$, with a somewhat lengthened sound of the \bar{a} . This sound is rather more open than the one mentioned above, and is apt, in the mouths of our common people, to become too broad and coarse. If well executed, however, it is scarcely at all inferior to the other in smoothness and grace. It is frequently heard among the well-educated in England; there is a tendency in many to intermingle the two, and it often requires a nice ear to determine which is used. Dr Webster, who adopted the former in his own practice, once remarked to the writer that he regarded the difference as unimportant, provided the New England sound be given without coarseness or undue breadth.

§ 5. Sound of the Italian a, marked \check{A} , \check{a} , as in ärm, fäther, fär; heard also in ah, hearth, aunt, guärd, are, &c.

NOTE. — This sound occurs in monosyllables and in the accented syllable of many words, before r final or r followed by another consonant (as in scar, tar, tart, yard, de-bar', de-part'), and in the derivatives of such words (as in scarred, tarry, of, or resembling tar, debarring). But when a occurs in an accented syllable, before r followed by a vowel or by another r, in a word not a derivative, it has its regular short sound, as in ärable, bärrrow, tärry, to delay.

The Italian a is the most open of all the vowel sounds.

and is one of the extremes of the vowel scale, the other extremes being ē and ō. In its formation, the mouth and throat are opened widely, and the tongue is left in its natural position of rest. It was formerly much more common in English than it is at the present day. The loss of it to so great an extent has been an injury to our language, and any further exclusion of it is therefore undesirable.

§ 6. Sound of a in certain words (chiefly monosyllables) ending in ff, fl, ss, st, sk, sp, with a few in nce, and nt, marked Ā, ā, as in stāff, grāfl, pāss, last, āsk, gāsp, chānce, chānt, &c.

NOTE. — Down to the close of the last century, words of this class were universally pronounced with the full Italian a. Some, especially among the vulgar, gave this too broadly, or with a kind of drawl (as pass like pahss, fast like fahst), so that Walker, disgusted with this abuse, and having a prejudice against intermediate sounds, marked all such words in his Dictionary by the sound of short a, giving the vowel in past, staff, &c., the sound of that in pāt, Stāffa (the island), &c. It will not be surprising — if we bear in mind the remark in § 3 on the extreme shortness and abruptness of this sound — that this change was strongly condemned by the orthoëpists. Jones declared it to be “a mincing affectation;” and Mitford said, “No English tongue fails to express, no English ear to perceive, the difference between the sound of a in passing and in pāssive. No colloquial familiarity will substitute the one for the other.” Still, the high character of Walker, and the increasing disgust for every thing like a drawl in speaking, gave currency to the change. It prevailed in London, and in some of the larger cities of America, until there sprung up, on both sides of the Atlantic, what Smart has called a “new school” and an “old school” on this subject. The extreme shortness of the a as marked by Walker, was still objected to; and Smart, in his Dictionary, first published in 1836, censured Walker on this account, saying, “He allows no compromise between the broad Italian a, with which a vulgar mouth pronounces ass, and the sound narrower (if possible) than the a in at, with which an affected speaker minces the same word.” He therefore spoke of a “medium sound” of the a in words of this class, saying, “We are apt, even in London, to give a slight prolongation to the vowel (ā) which would, in other cases, be quite rustic.” This prolongation has passed into America, and is now heard extensively among the followers of Walker in this country. It is a kind of drawl on the a in such words as last, pāst, fāst, &c. Smart states, however, in a recent letter, that in England this prolongation is now wholly laid aside. “Custom with us,” he remarks, “is much changed. It is no longer affectation to say āss; and grānt, grāfl, &c., at present indicate the pronunciation of well-educated London people under sixty-five or sixty years of age.” In other words, Walker’s extreme short sound of stāff, like Stāffa, and pāss like pāssive, is now adopted by many Londoners as the true and only proper sound.

The change introduced by Walker never had any great currency in this country, except in a few large cities and in places immediately affected by their influence. Our leading lexicographers, Webster and Worcester, declared against it. Many who were taught it in childhood have since laid it aside; and there is an increasing disposition among our teachers and literary men to unite on some intermediate sound between the extreme broadness, or length, of the a in father, and the extreme narrowness, or shortness of the a in fat. That of Smart (mentioned above as now disused) was intermediate in quantity; and so also is another, which Fulton and Knight have introduced into their Dictionary, namely, a shortened sound of the Italian a. They give the word “lari” as an example of the long Italian sound (as in father, &c.), and “last” of their short Italian sound; and mark with the latter the entire class of words now under consideration, such as staff, grāfl, pass, last, ask, gasp, and a few words in nce and nt, as dance, and chant. In this way they guard against that undue prolongation of the ā which offended Walker, and still retain in use one of the finest sounds of our language. This is the sound recommended in this volume, and marked Ā, ā. Some might possibly prefer one a little less open, verging slightly more towards that of a in an; and there is certainly room here for a diversity of taste and practice among those who agree in the main point of rejecting the extreme shortness of Walker’s sound. If it be proposed, however, to give these words a sound intermediate in quality between the Italian a and our short a, one thing is important to be considered. Mr. Smart states, in answer to an inquiry on the subject, that, although he can exemplify such a sound, he is not aware that any thing of the kind is used among the educated classes in England. The only alternative there seems to be between the Italian a and the extreme short sound of Walker; and it is natural and desirable that those among us who reject the latter should adopt the same sound with those who led the way in that rejection upon the other side of the Atlantic. Any one who heard the lectures of Mr. Thackeray during his visit to this country in 1855–56, and noticed his pronunciation with reference to this subject, must have been struck with the definite sound of the Italian a which he gave to all words of this class. He even gave that sound in the word answer, which, though common in England, is comparatively rare in America. A gentleman who held for many years a high diplomatic station at the court of St. James, told the writer that, except among Londoners, he almost uniformly heard the Italian a in such cases, especially among the officers of government, and the nobility and gentry with whom he was led to associate. Such, also, is said by members of Oxford and Cambridge to be the case now at those universities; and some of the most eminent preachers of the kingdom, such as the Bishop of Oxford (Walterforce), have been mentioned in confirmation of this remark. It is for such reasons that the words in question are here marked with a shortened or brief sound of the Italian a, in accordance with the views and practice of Dr. Webster.

§ 7. Sound of broad a, marked Ā, ā, as in all, talk, hard, swarm; heard also in sauce, awe, geōrgic, fōrk, grōat, bought, &c.

NOTE. — This has sometimes been called the German a, but is a broader and more guttural sound, being formed by a depression of the larynx, and a consequent retraction of the tongue, which enlarges the cavity of the mouth posteriorly.

§ 8. Short sound of broad a, marked Ā, ā, as in what, wander, wallow, &c.; heard also in knowledge.

NOTE. — This is the extreme short sound of broad a, and coincides with the sound of o in not. It differs, however, in quality as well as quantity from broad a, being a more open sound; that is to say, the aperture of the lips and the internal cavity of the mouth, though of the same shape in both cases, are somewhat larger for the former (ā) than for the latter (ā), while the position of the tongue remains unaltered throughout. Nor is this difference peculiar to ā and ā; it also exists between the other pairs of vowel sounds that have essentially the same organic formation, but differ in length or duration: in each case, that which is the briefer in quantity is the more open in quality of the two.

There is a sound of a, as heard in salt, although, &c., which is intermediate between that in awe and that in what. No distinctive mark is used to indicate this intermediate sound, but the inquirer is referred to this section from all words in the vocabulary in which the sound occurs. — See § 21, NOTE.

§ 9. An exceptional sound of a occurs in the words any, many. It is as if they were spelled ēn’y, mēn’y, being the regular short sound of e.

E.

§ 10. Regular long sound, marked Ē, ē, as in ēve, mēte,

&c.; heard also in Cæsar, béard, feet, lèisure, péople, kéy, machîne, fiéld, æsofagus, quay, &c.

NOTE. — In the formation of this element, the tongue is raised convexly within the dome of the palate, pressing against its sides, and leaving only the smallest possible passage through which a vowel sound can be uttered. E is therefore the closest lingual or palatal vowel, and is one of the extremes of the natural vowel scale, a and oo being the other extremes.

§ 11. Regular short sound, marked Ē, ĕ, as in ĕnd, mĕt; heard also in many, aphæresis, said, says, fĕather, hĕifer, lĕopard, friĕnd, asafætida, bury, guĕss.

NOTE. — This is not a short sound of the long e. It has usually been considered as the shut or extreme short sound of the a in fate: but most orthoëpists at the present day, while allowing it to be a nearly related sound, regard it as distinct, being slightly more open than the radical part of ā, and lacking the vanish: both are intermediate between ā and ē, the tongue not being so much depressed as for the former, nor raised so high toward the palate as for the latter. — See § 2, and § 3, NOTE.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF E.

§ 12. Sound of e like â (as in care, fair, bear, &c.), marked Ê, ê, as in êre, thêre, hêir, ê'er, &c. This, as is stated in § 4, is the same sound with that of a in care. — See § 4.

§ 13. Sound of e like ā, marked Ē, ē, as in ĕh, ĕight, prĕy, vĕin, &c. — See § 2.

NOTE. — This is essentially the sound which this letter generally has in the leading modern languages of Continental Europe.

§ 14. Sound of e before r, verging toward the sound of u in urge, marked Ē, ĕ, as in ĕrmine, vĕrge, prĕfĕr; heard also in ĕarrest, mĕrth, myrtle, &c.

NOTE. — The case here contemplated is that of e before r, in a monosyllable or in an accented syllable in which the r is not followed by a vowel or by another r, or in derivatives of such words, when the syllable retains its accent, as in herd, defer, deferring, err, erring, term, mercy, maternal. When e occurs before r, followed by a vowel or by another r, in a word not derived as above, it either has the short sound, as in ferry, peril, perilous, heritage, ferule, or the long sound, as in period, hero, material.

The vulgar universally, and many cultivated speakers both in England and America, give the e in such words the full sound of u in urge, as, murcy for mercy, turm for term, &c. But, in the most approved style of pronunciation, the organs are placed in a position intermediate between that requisite for sounding ū and that for sounding ĕ, thus making (as Smart observes) “a compromise between the two.” In other words, this element is radically distinct from both ū and ĕ, being less guttural than the former and less palatal than the latter, from which it was doubtless originally evolved.

I.

§ 15. Regular long sound, marked Ī, ī, as in īce; heard also in āisle, hēight, eījing, eīje, vīe, guīle, buīj, thīj, rīje, &c.; in pint, in chill, mild, wild; and in monosyllables ending with nd, as bind, find, kind, &c., except wīnd, meaning air in motion, and wīnd, to scent, to cause to lose or to recover wind or breath.

NOTE. — This sound, though represented by a single character, is not a simple element, but a diphthong. It is composed of ā and ē as extremes, with the ā accented, but made so very brief that the ear with difficulty recognizes the precise character of the sound.

§ 16. Regular short sound, marked Ī, ĭ, as in īll; heard also in English, beaūfin, been, sīeve, women, busy, guīnea, nīymph, &c.

NOTE. — This is not a short sound of long i. Many have considered it as the shut or extreme short sound of long e; but it is really a distinct, though closely allied, element, and is so regarded by the best orthoëpists at the present time. In its formation, the tongue is slightly relaxed from the position assumed for producing ē; this is the only difference between the two sounds. — See § 3, NOTE, and § 8, NOTE.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF I.

§ 17. Sound of i like that of long e, marked Ī, ĭ, as in pīque, machîne, caprice, &c. — See § 10.

NOTE. — This is appropriately the sound of i in all foreign languages. Most of the English words in which this sound is represented by this letter are from the French.

§ 18. Sound of i before r, verging toward u in urge, marked Ī, ĭ, as in īrksome, vīrgin, thīrsty, &c., identical with that of e in ermine.

NOTE. — I in this case is sounded by many speakers like ū, as vūrgin for virgin. The observations made under § 14 as to short e in words like ermine, verdure, &c., apply fully to this sound of the i.

O.

§ 19. Regular long sound, marked Ō, ō, as in ōld; heard also in hautboy, beau, yeōman, sew, rōam, hōe, dōor, shōulder, grōw, ōwe, &c.

NOTE. — This sound of o is in most cases diphthongal, having a slight “vanish” in oo annexed to the “radical” or initial sound, as in below, where the wo may be regarded as representing the vanish. The radical part of the sound is a simple element, intermediate with respect to the mode of its formation, between a and oo, the tongue being less depressed than for a, and the labial aperture greater than for oo. It is essentially the same element as that described in the next section, but of a slightly less open quality. The vanish of the o is omitted in unaccented syllables, as in o-pin-ion, to-bac-co, &c., but ought not to be omitted elsewhere. This remark is important as bearing on a very prevalent error, which will be mentioned in the next section.

§ 20. It is exceedingly common, in some parts of the United States, to shorten the long o of certain words, as bolt, most, only, &c., by dropping the vanishing element which belongs to the vowel, and giving to the radical portion a somewhat more open quality; but this practice is wholly opposed to English usage. The provincialism here pointed out obtains, more or less widely, in respect to the following words, namely: boat, bolster, bolt, bone, both, broke, broken, choke, cloak, close, a., coach, coat, coax, collar, comb, dolt, folks, goad, hold, holm, holster, home, homely, hope, jolt, load, molten, most, molt, none, only, open, pole, polka, poultice, poultry, revolt, road, rode, rogue, soap, sloth, smoke, sofa, sol (the name of the note G of the musical scale), spoke, v., spoken, stone, story, swollen (or swoln), throat, toad, upholsterer, upholstery, whole, wholly, whole-some, wrote, yōke, yo'k, and possibly a few others. Most persons in New England sound the o in a part or all of these words without the vanish, while some among the vulgar go further, and give to a number of them almost the sound of short u, as hum for home, &c. They should all, however, have the full sound of the o as heard in accented syllables, though not in all cases with quite the same prolongation of the sound. Thus the full o of dome should be given to home; of hole to whole; of slope to hope; of poach to coach; of moat to coat; of joke to spoke, cloak, smoke, and broke; of hone to bone and stone; and similarly in the other cases. Still, the theoretic phonologist can not but regard the true short o described in this section as an important and legitimate member of the family of vowel sounds, and must look upon its absence in the established orthoëpy of our language as a defect and an anomaly. To him, therefore, its rise and growth in the popular speech are interesting facts, and its final prevalence and admittance to equal rights with the other vowels is a thing he would rather desire than deprecate.

§ 21. Regular short sound, marked \ddot{O} , \ddot{o} , as in odd, nōt; heard also in wānder, knōwledge, &c. — See § 3, NOTE, and § 9.

NOTE. — This is the shut or extreme short sound of broad a, and coincides with the sound of a in what. There is a medium sound of this letter which is neither so short as in not, nor so long as in naught. This medium sound is usually given to the short o when directly followed by ss, st, and th, as in cross, cost, broth; also, in gone, cough, trough, off, and some other words. To give the extreme short sound to such words is affectation; to give them the full sound of broad a is vulgar.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF O.

§ 22. Sound of o like short u, marked \hat{O} , \hat{o} , as in ōther, dōve, &c.; heard also in dōes, gān, flōod, dōuble, &c. — See § 31.

§ 23. Sound of o like ōō long, marked \ddot{O} , \ddot{o} , as in prōve, dō, mōve, tōmb, &c. — See § 26.

§ 24. Sound of o like ōō short, marked \ddot{O} , \ddot{o} , as in bōsom, wōlf, wōman, &c. — See § 8, NOTE, and § 27.

NOTE. — This sound coincides with that of u in bull, which is also used for oo short. — See § 33.

§ 25. Sound of o like a (broad a), marked \hat{O} , \hat{o} , as in ōrder, fōrm, stōrk, &c. — See § 7.

NOTE. — The letter o generally has this sound when it occurs before r in a monosyllable (as in fōr, fōrm, lōrd, nōrth) or in an accented syllable when not followed by a vowel or by another r, as in fōr'mer, ōr'chard, abhōr', and also in the derivatives of such words, as in fōr'med, nōrth'ern, abhōr'ring. But when o occurs, in an accented syllable, before r followed by a vowel or by another r in a word not a derivative, it has its regular short sound, as in fōr'eign, ōr'ange, tōr'rid. These two sounds of o, namely, the broad, like that of a in call, and the short, like that of a in what, have been confounded by some orthoëpists; but there is an obvious difference between them, not only in quantity, but also in quality, the short vowel being more open than the broad. — See § 8, NOTE.

OO.

§ 26. Regular long or open sound, marked \ddot{O} , \ddot{o} , as in mōon, food; heard also in rheum, drew, tō, canoe, manœuvre, group, rude, rue, recruit, &c.

NOTE. — This sound is the same element with the u of the Germans, Spaniards, and Italians, and coincides with the French ou in route. It is the closest labial vowel: that is to say, in forming it the lips are more nearly closed than for any other vowel, the sides being brought into contact with each other so as to leave only a small central aperture for the escape of the voice.

§ 27. Regular short sound of oo, marked \ddot{O} , \ddot{o} , as in wōol, fōot; heard also in wōlf, shōuld, būll, &c. — See § 8, NOTE.

§ 28. The following words, room, root, roof, rood, broom, and son, have properly the long sound of oo, as in fōod (see § 26); but many pronounce them with the short sound, as in fōot (see § 27). New Englanders especially are often recognized abroad by their habit of pronouncing rōom, room; rōot, rōot; rōof, rōof; rōod, rōod; brōom, brōom, and sōon, sōon.

U.

§ 29. Regular long sound, marked \ddot{U} , \ddot{u} , as in mūte, ūnit, &c.; heard also in beaūty, feōdal, feūd, pew, ewe, lieū, view, cūe, sūit, yew, you, yule, &c.

NOTE. — This is a compound sound, formed of the vowel oo, with a slight sound of the consonant y or of the vowel ē or ī before it. When the u begins a syllable, or is preceded by any one of the palatal or labial sounds k, g, p, b, f, v, m, the sound of y is clearly perceived, as in the words usage, cube, gules, puny, burin, futile, mule.

§ 30. When the long u is preceded, in the same syllable, by any one of the consonants d, t, l, n, s, and th, it is peculiarly difficult to introduce the sound of y; and hence negligent speakers omit it entirely, pronouncing duty, dooty; tune, toon; lute, loot; nuisance, noosance; suit, soot; thurable, thoorible, &c. The reason is, that, in forming these consonants, the organs are in a position to pass with perfect ease to the sound of oo, while it is very difficult in doing so to touch the intermediate y; hence the y in such cases is very apt to be dropped. On this point Smart remarks, "To say tube (*tjoo*b), lucid (*lyoo*cid), with the u as perfect [i. e. with a distinct sound of y prefixed to oo] as in cube, cubic, mute, &c., is either northern or laboriously pedantic," — a description which applies to the vulgar in our Eastern States, and to those who are over-nice at the South. The practice of good society is to let the y sink into a very brief sound of long e or of short i, both of which have a very close organic relationship to consonant y. Special care must be taken not only to make this sound as brief as possible, but to pronounce it in the same syllable with the oo. We thus avoid the two extremes, of overdoing, on the one hand, by making too much of the y, and, on the other hand, of sounding only the oo after the manner of careless speakers.

It ought to be added that wherever the sound of sh, zh, or y consonant, precedes the u, the y is omitted, as in sure, sounded shoor; sugar, shoogar; azure, azh'oor; yule, yool, &c.

§ 31. Regular short sound, marked \ddot{U} , \ddot{u} , as in būt; heard also in sūn, dōes, blōod, tōuch, &c.

NOTE. — This is not the short sound of long u. It is a distinct and simple element, and derives its peculiar guttural character from the influence of the pharynx and back part of the mouth. In its organic formation, it is essentially the same sound as u in urge, but is shorter in quantity, and of a rather more open quality. — See § 3, NOTE, and § 8, NOTE.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF U.

§ 32. Sound of u when preceded by r in the same syllable, marked \ddot{U} , \ddot{u} , as in rūde, rūmor, rūral, &c.

NOTE. — All the English orthoëpists agree that the u in this case drops the y or ī which is generally an element of its compound sound when preceded, in the same syllable, by any other consonant than r, and becomes simply oo, so that rue is pronounced rōo; rule, rōol; ruby, rōoby, &c.

§ 33. Sound of u like that of short oo (\ddot{O}), marked \ddot{U} , \ddot{u} , as in būll, put, push, pull, &c. — See § 8, NOTE, and § 27.

§ 34. Sound of u before r in such words as ūrge, būrn, fūrl, concūr, &c., marked \ddot{U} , \ddot{u} ; heard also in worm, jōurney, &c.

NOTE. — This is often called the natural vowel, because it requires almost no effort to utter it, the month being slightly opened in the easiest or most natural and unconstrained manner for the passage of voice in a nearly unmodified form. But the name is scarcely appropriate; for the sound is altogether wanting in many languages, and — with the single exception of the English — it occupies a comparatively subordinate place in the vowel systems of the principal tongues in which it occurs. It has been more aptly termed the neutral vowel, with reference to its want of any strongly-marked distinctive character; and this name is here adopted as, on the whole, preferable to any other. The sound differs from that of short u (with which it has often been identified) in length, and in a somewhat greater degree of closeness. (See § 8, NOTE.) It occurs, in monosyllables, before r not followed by a vowel (as in cur, fur, furl, hurt, burst, purrr); in accented syllables, before r final or r followed by one or more consonants different from itself (as in recur, curfew, furlong, disbursed); and in derivatives from any such words (as currish, furry, purring, recurring). Except in the cases here specified, the letter u before r has its short sound, as in cūrry, hūrry.

§ 35. Regular long sound, marked Ŷ, ȳ, as in flȳ, stȳle, skȳ, edifȳ, &c.

NOTE. — This is the same sound as long i. — See § 15.

§ 36. Regular short sound, marked Ț, ȣ, as in cȣst, nȣmph, lȣric, abȣss, coinciding with the sound of short i. — See § 16.

OCCASIONAL SOUND OF Y.

§ 37. Y has only one occasional sound; namely, in such words as myrrh, myrtle, in which it has, like the e and i in similar circumstances (see § 14 and § 18), very nearly the sound of u in urge. This is indicated in the Dictionary by respelling, the words in which y has this sound being very few in number.

II. REGULAR OR PROPER DIPHTHONGS.

OI or OY.

§ 38. The sound of oi or oy (unmarked), as heard in oil, join, oyster, &c.

NOTE. — The elements of this diphthong are ô as in cord (the same as broad a), and î as in fin (short i), with the accent on the former. Oy is always regular in English words, and oi is regular also, except in the following cases; namely, avouir (av-ur-du-poiz), connoisseur (kon-is-soor), shamois (shammy), choir (kwire), tortoise (tor'tis), turquois (sometimes pronounced tur-kerz).

Until near the beginning of the present century, oi was extensively pronounced like long i, as jīne for join, rīle for roil, &c.; but this pronunciation is now confined exclusively to the lowest classes.

OW.

§ 39. The sound of ow (unmarked), as heard in owl, vowel, flower, &c.

NOTE. — This diphthong is compounded of the elements ô and oo, the former of which is accented, but made extremely brief. In a considerable number of words, ow represents the sound of long o; in the single word knowledge and in its derivatives, it has the sound of short o. These are accordingly distinguished by the proper mark, as blōw, slōw, knōw, knōwledge, &c.

OU.

§ 40. This diphthong has two leading sounds.

(1.) That of ow in words derived from the Anglo-Saxon, as in out, hound, &c.

(2.) That of oo in words derived from the French, as in soup, group, &c.

§ 41. The diphthong ou has also, in a number of words, the sound of long o, as in sōul; in a few cases, the sound of the broad a, as in bought (bawt); sometimes that of short u, as in cōuple; sometimes that of u in urge, as in adjourn (adjurn); and, in the three words could, would, should, that of ōo as in foot. These peculiarities are indicated in this Dictionary by the appropriate mark over the significant or sounded vowel, or by respelling.

III. VOWELS IN UNACCENTED SYLLABLES.

§ 42. When an unaccented syllable ends in a consonant, its vowel, if single, has, in strict theory, its regular short or shut sound, though uttered somewhat more faintly, or with a less proportionate force, than in an accented syllable, as in as-sign, con'duct, con'flict, &c. In many words of this class, however, the vowel is apt to suffer a change or corruption of its distinctive quality, passing over into some sound of easier utterance. Thus the vowel sounds in the unaccented syllables ar, er, ir, or, yr (as in altar, offer, tapir, mirror, zephyr), are coincident with that of the second u in sulphur. As a general rule, a and o, in unaccented syllables ending in a consonant, verge toward, or fall into, the sound of short u, particularly in colloquial discourse, as in bal'lad, bar'rack, ver'bal, bed'lam, cap'stan, jal'ap, bi'as, bal'last, hav'oc, meth'od, pis'tol, ven'om, compel, flag'on, bish'op, pi'lot, prov'ost. In such words, it would ordinarily be the merest pedantry or affectation to give the vowel its regular short sound.

The vowel e, in unaccented syllables ending in a consonant, is, in some words, liable to be sounded like short i (as in barrel), and, in others, like short u (as in si'ent); but these changes are usually avoided by good speakers.

It may here be remarked, that some of the diphthongs are similarly affected by the absence of accent. Thus ai, which, in an accented syllable, is usually sounded like long a (as in com-plāin), sinks into ē or ī in an unaccented syllable, as in mountain, pronounced moun'tēn or moun'tīn. So ei, ey, and ie become changed in pronunciation into ī (as in sur'feit, hon'eŷ, car'ried), and ou is sounded as ū (as in grier'oŷs).

It is also to be observed, that, in the unaccented syllables of some words from the Latin, the vowel is long, though followed by a consonant in the same syllable, as in cantharidēs; but, in such cases, the long mark is, in the Dictionary, placed over the vowel.

§ 43. When the unaccented syllable does not end in a consonant, two cases arise; namely, —

(1.) The syllable may consist of, or may end in, a vowel, as in the words a-bound, di-rect, e-vent, mo-lest, &c.

(2.) The syllable may end in a consonant, with final e mute at the close of words, as in ul'ti-mate, fi-nite, rep'tile, &c.

The former of these will, for the sake of brevity, be called No. 1, the latter No. 2. These will now be considered under each of the vowels.

A.

§ 44. (No. 1. See § 43.) Here the a has properly a brief sound of the Italian a, as in Cu'ba, a-muse, A-mer'i-ca; but, in familiar speech, it is almost always so slighted and obscured as to be indistinguishable from the neutral vowel, or u in urge, murmur, &c. In some words, like ā-e'ri-al, chā-ot'ic, &c., the a has its regular long or name sound, somewhat shortened by the omission of the "vanish." This is due to the influence of the subsequent vowel, which, in fluent utterance, refuses to take the Italian a before it without the intervention of one or more consonants. Some speakers in this country give the same brief sound of long a to this letter when it occurs in an initial unaccented syllable followed by a consonant in an accented syllable, as in a-bound, fa-tal'i-ty; but this practice is not sanctioned by the best orthoëpists. In the terminations -a-ny and -a-ry, the a has usually the same sound as short e unaccented, as in mis'cel-la-ny, mo'ment-a-ry, &c.

§ 45. (No. 2. See § 43.) Here the a has sometimes its long sound, particularly in verbs ending in ate, as, ded'i-câte, ed'u-câte, &c. In other parts of speech, the sound of the a is more obscure, verging toward short e, as in ul'ti-mate, night/in-gale, preface, &c. In some instances it is apt to verge toward short i, as in vil/lage.

E.

§ 46. (No. 1. See § 43.) Here the e has its long sound, slightly obscure or abridged, as in e-vent', e-mo'tion, soci'e-ty, &c. Care should be taken not to sink the e into an indefinite sound of short u, as, soci'ûty for society, &c.

§ 47. (No. 2. See § 43.) Here, also, the e has usually its long sound a little shortened and slighted, as in ob'so-lete. In a few instances, it verges toward short e, as in college.

I.

There is great diversity in the ease of this letter. Hence it is difficult to lay down general rules; and, as Smart remarks, "The inquirer must be sent to the Dictionary to learn, in each particular case, the true pronunciation."

§ 48. (No. 1. See § 43.) I, when final in a syllable, has more commonly its short sound, as in phī-los'o-phy, dī-rect', &c. But the i is usually long in the initial syllables i, bi, chi, cli, cri, pri, tri, as in ī-de'a, bī-ol'o-gy, crī-te-ri-on, pri-me'val, &c.

§ 49. (No. 2. See § 43.) In these terminations, usage is greatly divided. On the whole, the i is more generally short, as in ac-com'plīce, in'fi-nīte, fer'tile, mar'i-tīme, ad-a-man'tīne, an'ise, pos'i-tīve, &c.; but there are some important exceptions, as, cock'a-trīce, ex'ile, gen'tile, con'cu-bīne, ar'chīve, &c.; also all names of minerals ending in lite or ite; as chrys'o-līte, ste'a-tīte, &c. Here the Dictionary must be consulted for the several words. According to Smart and Cull, chemical terms ending in ide (as bromide, chloride, &c.) should be pronounced with the i long; but all other orthoëpists are unanimous in making the vowel short; and the propriety of the latter mode of pronunciation is established by the fact that this whole class of words is not unfrequently spelled without the final e, thus, bromid, chlorid.

O.

§ 50. (No. 1. See § 43.) Here the o has usually its long sound slightly abbreviated, and without its "vanish" (see § 19), as in o-pin'ion, croc'o-dile, to-bac'co, &c. Care should here be taken not to sink the o into short u, as careless speakers often do, pronouncing o-pin'ion, up-pin'ion, &c. An exception, however, is perhaps to be made in the ease of the terminations -o-ny and -o-ry, in which, according to universal usage in England, the o is sounded like short u unaccented, as in mat'ri-mo-ny, prom'is-so-ry, &c. Yet most speakers in this country give the o in such words its long sound, slightly abbreviated, as in other unaccented syllables. The practice — too common among us — of laying a secondary accent on the o is a fault which should be sedulously avoided. — See § 110.

§ 51. (No. 2. See § 43.) The o in these terminations has usually its regular long sound, as in tel'e-scōpe, ep'ōde, &c. Sometimes it has the sound of short o, as in dī'a-lōgue: in other cases, it verges toward short u, as in pur'pose.

U.

§ 52. (No. 1. See § 43.) Here the u generally has its long sound slightly abridged, as in ac'cu-rate, e-mol'u-ment, mai-u-nit', an'nu-al, dep'u-tize, u-til'i-ty. But when the u is preceded by d, t, or s, these combinations, du, tu, and su, are by the great majority of speakers changed into joo, choo, and shoo or zhoo, respectively, as in ed'-u-cate (ēj'oo-kate), ha-bit'u-al (ha-bīch'oo-al), sen'su-ous (sēn'shoo-us), vis'u-al (vīzh'oo-al). (See §§ 66, 77, 92, 93, 95, and 107.) In the notation of words of this class in the Dictionary, the regular pronunciation is generally given instead of the irregular, in conformity with the views of Dr. Webster; but, in many instances, reference is made to the remarks contained in the present section. When the u is preceded by r, it simply drops the y sound, and is pronounced oo, as in er-u-dī'tion (er-oo-dish'un). (See § 32.)

§ 53. (No. 2. See § 43.) The u in these terminations should generally retain its regular long sound (see §§ 29, 30) slightly abridged, as in grat'i-tūde, in'sti-tūte, ridi-cūle, trib'ūte, im-post'hūme, sub'ter-fūge, &c. There are a few exceptions, as min'ute (min'it), n., and let'tuce (let'tis). If the letter r precedes the u, the initial element of the vowel is dropped, as in ce'ruse (se'roos), per'uke (pēr'-ook), &c. (See § 32.) On the other hand, when the u is immediately preceded by the letter t, it should never be changed into mere oo, as grat'i-tood for grat'i-tūde, in'sti-toot for in'sti-tūte — a practice which prevails among the vulgar.

The terminations dure, ture, and sure, though sometimes pronounced with the regular sounds of the letters, are more commonly pronounced joor, choor, and shoor or zhoor, respectively, as in the words tem'per-a-tūre (tem'per-a-choor), ver'dure (ver'joor), cy'no-sure (si no-shoor), ex-po'sure (eks-po'zhoor). (See §§ 66, 77, 92, 93, 95, and 107.) When these terminations are immediately preceded by an accented syllable, many speakers change them still further into chur, jur, and shur, or zhur, as in na'ture (na'chur), ver'dure (ver'jur), cen'sure (sen'shur), ex-po'sure (eks-po'zhur). The Dictionary follows the practice of Dr. Webster in giving to dure and ture the regular sounds of d, t, and u (pronouncing verdure, vērd'yoor, creature, kreet'yoor, &c.), while sure is respelt shoor or zhoor, as in the examples given above. This, it is true, is an inconsistency; but it is one of little moment, inasmuch as general usage is so fluctuating, and as reference is in most cases made to the present section.

Y.

§ 54. (No. 1. See § 43.) Here y has usually its short sound, as in hŷ-poc'ri-sŷ, mŷ-thol'o-gŷ, van'i-tŷ, mer'ri-lŷ, proph'e-cŷ, &c.; but verbs ending in fŷ have the y long, as in just'i-fŷ, mag'ni-fŷ, &c.; also the three verbs, oc-cu-pŷ, mul'ti-plŷ, proph'e-sŷ.

§ 55. (No. 2. See § 43.) The y in these terminations (which are few in number) is generally long, as in an'o-dŷne, per'i-stŷle, ne'o-phŷte, pros'e-lŷte, &c.

IV. SILENT VOWELS.

§ 56. Vowels which are printed in Italics are not to be sounded, as the e in used, burd'n, the i in cousin, &c. Some of these cases require a more particular consideration, and will now be mentioned.

E final.

§ 57. The letter e is always mute when final, except in monosyllables containing no other vowel, in classical words, and in some words from modern foreign languages; but, in a monosyllable or in an accented syllable of a word, though silent, it generally serves the purpose of indicating that a preceding single vowel followed by a single consonant, a consonant digraph, or the combined letters st or ng, has its regular long sound, as in plane, hope, cube, inscribe, paste, change. When a silent e follows c or g at the end of a word, it serves also to show that the consonant is to have its soft, and not its hard, sound, as in ace, nice, age, huge, oblige. In a number of monosyllables (as bide, côme, give, were, dône, &c.) and in the accented syllables of a few words derived from them (as forbide, becôme, forgive), the e does not have its usual effect of lengthening the sound of the preceding vowel. In unaccented syllables, it sometimes keeps the vowel in its long sound, as in gentile, supine, finite, archive; but in a great many instances it exercises no such influence, as in justice, hostile, maritime, doctrine, anise, granite, plaintive.

EN with E silent.

§ 58. Most words ending in en drop the e in pronunciation, as, often (of'n), heaven (heav'n), even (ev'n), &c. One of the most prevalent errors of the present day, especially among our clergy (for the laity have fallen into it much less), is that of pronouncing the words even (ev'n) evun, heaven (heav'n) heavun or heaven, often (of'n) often, &c. Walker remarks with great keenness on this error, declaring it to be a "puerile and false pronunciation." If the writer is correctly informed, it is never heard among good speakers in England. The following are nearly all the words in which the e should be sounded: aspen, chicken, hyphen, kitchen, jerken, latten, lichen, marten, mynchen, paten, patten, platen, rowen, wicken, and yewen. The e is also sounded when preceded by the liquids l, m, n, r, as in woolen, omen, linen, siren, &c., though fallen, stolen, and swollen omit the e in pronunciation. With regard to Eden, bounten, heathen, mitten, sudden, and sloven, there is a diversity of usage among good speakers in this country, some suppressing, and some sounding, the e.

ON with O silent.

§ 59. Many words ending in on preceded by c, ck, s, and t, omit the o in pronunciation, as in reckon (reck'n), bacon (bak'n), treason (treas'n), mutton (mutt'n), &c.

ED with E silent.

§ 60. The termination ed is usually shortened in pronunciation by dropping the sound of the e (as in loved (lov'd), aimed (aim'd), diffused (diffus'd), &c.), unless this letter is preceded by d or t (as in amended, contented, &c.), when its omission is organically impossible. But in adverbs formed by adding ly, and in nouns formed by adding ness to words ending in ed, the e of this termination is uniformly sounded, as in assuredly, confusedly, renewedly, amazedness, composedness, &c. There are also some participial adjectives, and some adjectives not derived from verbs, in which the e is commonly sounded, as, aged, beloved, blessed, crabbed, cragged, crooked, crutched, cursed, cupped, deuced, dogged, hooked, jagged, learned, legged, naked, peaked, picked (sharp), ragged, rugged, stubbed, wicked, winged, wretched. The e is also pronounced in the derivatives formed from such adjectives, as, learnedly, blessedness; but is generally omitted in the compounds, as, full-aged (āj'd), sheath-winged (-wing'd). In poetry, the meter often requires us to pronounce ed as a distinct syllable, when it would not be so pronounced in prose. In all cases where it should properly be sounded, its omission is a mark of great vulgarity.

NOTE.—In reading the Scriptures and Prayer-Book, some persons, chiefly among the clergy, make it a practice to pronounce the participial termination -ed, in most cases in which it is not preceded by a vowel (as in believed, revealed), as a distinct syllable. Thus, "Whom he did predestinate, them he also call-ed; and whom he call-ed, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified." This usage was formerly a very prevalent one, but at the present time it is much more limited, and is commonly regarded as savoring of affectation or of an old-school education.

EL with E silent.

§ 61. As a general rule, the e is sounded in these terminations, as in gravel, level, vessel, chapel, &c. To omit the e in such cases, pronouncing level, lev'l, chapel, chap'l, &c., is generally regarded as a vulgarism. The following are nearly or quite all the words of this kind in which the e is properly omitted; namely, barbel, betel, chattel, drazel, drivel, easel, grovel, hazel, mangel wurzel, mantel, mispickel, mussel, navel, ousel, ravel, rivel, scovel, shckel, shovel, shrivel, snivel, swingel, swivel, teasel, toggel, towsel, weasel, and, according to a few orthoëpists, model.

CONSONANTS.

B.

§ 62. The sound represented by this letter (which is unmarked) is heard in the words barn, rob, labor, table, &c.

NOTE.—This sound is formed by the compression of vocalized breath or voice, within the mouth, while the lips are shut and the back nostrils are closed by covering them with the soft palate. When preceded by m, or followed by t, in the same syllable, b is generally silent, as in bomb, climb, tomb, debt, doubt, subtle, &c. Accumb, dithyramb, iamb, succumb, rhomb, rhumb, are said to be exceptions; yet, in this country, the first and the fourth of these words are commonly pronounced without sounding the b. B is also silent in bdellium.

C.

§ 63. C marked thus, Ç, ç (soft c), has the sound of s, as in cede, trace, acid, cypress, &c.

NOTE.—It takes this sound whenever it occurs before e (even if silent), i, or y.—See S, § 90.

When the letters ce or ci are immediately preceded by an accented syllable, and are followed by a vowel in the next syllable, the c combines in pronunciation with the e or i to form the sound sh, as in ocean, social, saponaceous, &c. In some words, c alone has this sound, or, rather, the e or i is used twice, first combining with the c to represent the sound of sh, and then, in the same syllable, taking on its customary vowel sound, as in so-ci-al-i-ty.—See SII, § 95.

§ 64. C marked thus, C, c (hard c), has the sound of k when it comes before a, o, u, l, or r, before k, s, or t, and when it ends a word or a syllable, as in call, cot, cut, clot, crown, black, act, zinc, traffic, picture, flaccid, ethics.—See K, § 78.

§ 65. C has the sound of z in the words sacrifice, sice, suffice, and discern, and in their derivatives. It is silent in the words czar, victuals, indict, and their derivatives, and also in the termination sce, as in muscle, corpuscle, &c.

CH.

§ 66. Ch unmarked (English ch) has very nearly the sound of tsh, as in child, much, richer, speechless, &c.

NOTE.—The compound sound signified by this digraph is not precisely equivalent to that represented by tsh. The ordinary sound of t is uttered with the tip of the tongue pressed against the gum of the upper front teeth. The first element of ch is uttered with the upper flat surface of the tongue, near the tip, applied to the gum at a point higher up, just where a relaxation of the contact produces the configuration requisite for sounding sh, the second constituent of the compound. The two elements are so closely blended in pronunciation that, like a diphthong or compound vowel, they have the effect of only a single sound or beat upon the ear.

When the letter t comes before u (= yoo) in an unaccented syllable, and is at the same time preceded by an accented syllable (as in nature), or when it is preceded by s or x in an accented syllable, and is immediately followed by ia (= ya) or io (= yo) in an unaccented syllable (as in Christian, question, admixture), both this letter and the y virtually following it are, by some speakers, preserved in their usual and appropriate sounds; thus, nature (nāt'yoor) Christian (krīst'yan), question (kwēst'yunn), admixture (ad-mīkst'yunn), &c. But by others they are suffered to sink into the easier and closely allied sound of ch in church; thus, nature (nā-choor), Christian (krīs'chan), question (kwēs'chun), admixture (ad-mīks'chun), &c. In regard to the pronunciation of words ending in teous, when this termination is not under, but is immediately preceded by, the accent (as in bounteous), usage is far from being uniform, some calling it t-yus (as bount'yus), others reducing it to chus (as bount'chus), while others corrupt it into che-us (as bount'cheus); but that mode which keeps both the t and the e in their customary sounds (as bount'e-us), is the most common, except in the single word righteous, which is properly pronounced rīt'yus, or rī'chus.

§ 67. Ch marked thus, Ch, ch (French ch), has the sound of sh, as in chaise, marchioness, machine, &c. — See § 95. Most words of this kind are derived from the French.

§ 68. Ch marked thus, Ch, ch (Latin ch), has the sound of k, as in chorus, epoch, distich, &c. This is the usual sound in words derived from the ancient languages; but cherub and charity, with their derivatives, are exceptions. Ch is always hard (like k) before l and r, as in chlo-rine, chrism.

NOTE. — The prefix arch, denoting chief, is pronounced ark in archangel and its derivatives, and in words from foreign languages in which the other component part is not separately current in English, as, architecture, archipelago, architrave, &c. In all other cases, it is pronounced artch, as in arch-bishop, arch-enemy, arch-fiend, &c.

§ 69. Ch is silent in the word drachm (though not in drachma, drak'ma), and also in schism, yacht (yot), and their derivatives.

§ 70. The sound of d (unmarked), as in dale, sad, rider, tradesman, &c.

NOTE. — The sound of this letter is formed by pressing the end of the tongue against the upper gums, and then forcing up vocalized breath, or voice, into the mouth, the soft palate being raised to prevent its escape through the nose.

This is the regular and usual sound of d; but when this letter follows a whispered or non-vocal consonant in the same syllable, it uniformly takes the sound of t, as in hissed (hist). (See § 108.) D is silent only in the words Wednesday and handkerchief.

F.

§ 71. The sound of f (unmarked), as in fame, leaf, definite, softly, &c.

NOTE. — This letter, which is never silent, is uttered by applying the lower lip to the upper front teeth, and emitting the breath. F has only this one sound, except in the single word of, in which it has the power of v. In the compounds hereof, thereof, and whereof, many speakers preserve the customary and regular sound of the f; but good usage allows it to be sounded as in the simple word.

G.

§ 72. G marked thus, G, g (g hard), has the sound of that letter in the word go; as in get, gave, give, begun, key, sluggish, smuggle, &c.

NOTE. — This sound is produced by a compression of in-tonated breath, or voice, confined within the mouth by a contact of the root of the tongue with the posterior part of the palate, which is at the same time raised sufficiently to cover the back nostrils, or openings from the pharynx into the nose.

G is hard before a (except in the single word gaol and its derivatives), o, u, h, l, and r, as in gate, gore, gum, ghastly, glad, grain. It is sometimes, though not usually, hard before e, i, and y, as in get, give, gibbous, muggy. This occurs chiefly in words from the Anglo-Saxon, and in a very few from the Greek. It is also, and always, hard at the end of words, and in the derivatives of such words, even when the g is doubled and followed by e, i, or y, as in crag, drug, fog, cragged, druggist, foggily.

When a, i, or ī, is preceded in the same syllable by the sound of g, or of k, very many speakers, particularly in England, interpose a slight sound of ē, as in card, kind, garden, guard, girl, guile, guise, sky. Some persons affect the introduction of a full and distinct sound of long e, or of consonant y, in such cases; saying kee-ard or k-yard, kee-īnd or k-yīnd, ske-īy or sk-yī, &c. The practice of a very large portion, if not a majority, of the best speakers in the United States, and also of many educated persons in England, is to join the sound of the g or k to that of the a or i, without suffering any other sound to slip in between them.

§ 73. G marked thus, G, g (g soft), has the compound sound of j, as in gem, rage, engine, caged, &c. — See § 77.

NOTE. — The letter g generally takes this sound when it comes before e, i, or y; but there are some exceptions. (See the preceding section.) G has also its soft sound before a in the single word gaol (now commonly spelled jail), and in its derivatives and compounds.

§ 74. In a few words from the French, g retains the sound of zh, which it has before e and i in that language, as in rouge (roozh), mirage (mī-rāzh), &c.

G is silent before m and n final, and also when initial before n, as in phlegm, sign, gnat.

For the office which g performs in such words as longer, stronger, &c., see § 82.

GH.

§ 75. This digraph (which is unmarked) is sounded, at the beginning of a word, like g hard, as in ghastly, ghost, gherkin, &c. It is silent after the vowel i, as in high, sigh, weigh; and it is generally silent before t, as in bought, fraught, taught, &c. The words draught and laughter, where it has the sound of f, are exceptions. In other cases, gh is generally pronounced like f, as in chough, cough, rough, tough, trough, enough, &c.; but it sometimes has the sound of k, as in hough, lough, shough. In the word hiccough, it is usually pronounced like p.

H.

§ 76. This letter (which is unmarked) is a mere aspiration or breathing, and represents no fixed configuration of the vocal organs.

NOTE. — It is an emission of unvoiced breath through whatever position of the mouth-organs is required by the succeeding element, the organs being always placed to form the next following letter before the h is pronounced. Thus, in he the tongue is put in a position to sound the e before the h is uttered; and similarly in hall, hard, home, &c. It differs, however, from a mere whispered vowel, in being an expiration of breath through the open glottis, whereas in whispering a vowel the glottis is almost closed by the approximation of the vocal cords.

In the following words, heir, heiress, herb, herbage, honest, honor, honorable, hour, with their derivatives, and also in hostler (more properly spelt ostler), h is silent. It is also marked as silent by most orthoëpists in hospital, humor, and humble, with their derivatives. There is, however, an increasing tendency to sound the h in these words. H is silent after g initial, as in ghost, gherkin, &c.; after r, as in rhyme, myrrh, &c.; and also when preceded by a vowel in the same syllable, as in ah, eh, oh, buhl, Jehovah, &c. In many parts of England, the sound of this letter is almost always omitted where it ought to be uttered, and uttered where it ought to be omitted; as 'ouse for house, happle for apple, &c. This very gross and vulgar error is rarely, if ever, heard among natives of the United States.

J.

§ 77. This letter (which is unmarked) has very nearly the sound of dz, being precisely the same as that of g soft, as in jar, jeer, joke, &c. — See § 73.

NOTE. — The sound of j, though almost identical with that of dz, differs from it as the sound of ch in chin differs from that of tsh. (See § 63, NOTE.) J is never silent. In the word hallelujah, it has the sound of consonant y.

In words in which d precedes a letter having regularly the sound of y, and occurring in an unaccented syllable, as in modulate (mod'u-late), soldier (söld'yer), the sound of j is very often substituted for the combined sounds of the d and y (thus, mój'oo-late, sölj'er); — just as the sound of ch is substituted for the combined sounds of t and y in nature, question, righteous, &c. (See § 63, NOTE.) Smart remarks, "It is possible to preserve the pure sound of the t and d in nature and verdure: yet nothing is more certain than that they are not preserved pure by the best and most careful speakers."

K.

§ 78. This letter (which is unmarked) has one uniform sound, as heard in keep, king, kitchen, &c., and is precisely equivalent to c hard. — See § 64.

NOTE. — The sound represented by this letter differs from that of g in go (hard g) only in being a whispered and not a vocal utterance; the organs are placed in the same position for forming both sounds. Before n, in the same syllable, k is silent, as in knack, knell, knit, know, &c. It is also silent after c, as in back, barrack, &c. In regard to the pronunciation sometimes given to such words as kind, sky, &c., see § 72, NOTE.

NOTE. — This letter has only one sound, which consists of an efflux of vocalized breath, or voice, over the sides of the tongue, while its tip is pressed against the gums of the upper front teeth. L is silent in many words, especially before a final consonant, as in almond, malmsey, palmer, alms, calm, walk, half, could, would, should, &c.

M.

§ 80. The sound of m (unmarked), as heard in make, aim, clamor, armed, &c.

NOTE. — This letter has one uniform sound, produced by closing the lips, and letting the voice issue through the nose. It is silent when it precedes n in the same syllable, as in mnemonics.

N.

§ 81. The sound of n (unmarked), as heard in nail, ten, panel, entry, &c.

NOTE. — In the production of this sound, the tip of the tongue is pressed against the upper gums, as for d; but the voice, instead of being confined within the mouth, is suffered to escape uninterruptedly through the nose, the nasal passages being uncovered for that purpose.

When final after l or m, n is uniformly silent, as in kiln, condemn, solemn, hymn, limn, &c.; but it is generally sounded in the derivatives formed from such words by adding to them a termination beginning with a vowel, as in condemnatory, solemnize, hymnic, limner, &c. In the present participles of verbs ending in mn, as contemn, hymn, &c., the n, though often unpronounced, is more properly sounded, as, contemning, hymning, &c.

§ 82. The sound of n as heard in linger, link, uncle, &c. (marked N, n).

NOTE. — This is essentially the same sound as that represented by ng; but its length varies greatly according as it is followed by a whispered or a vocal consonant. When it is followed in the same syllable by the sound of k, as in link, it is cut so short by the instantaneous and perfect closure of the organs which form this pure mute as to add almost nothing to the length of the syllable. It seems undesirable, therefore, to respell words ending in nk by the use of ng; and, in this volume, this is not done, a diacritical mark being placed below the n instead, as a sufficient indication of the true quality and quantity of the sound. But when this sound of n is followed by that of g in a separate syllable, as in the primitive words anger, finger, conger, hunger, it is long and sonorous, and increases the duration of the syllabic utterance very perceptibly. As a general rule, the change of n into n̄ takes place only before g and k (or before the equivalents of k, namely, c, q, and x = ks). It takes place before k or its equivalents when any one of these letters follows n in the same syllable, as in link, cinq̄e, minx, be-think̄, adunquē, phar'ynx; and before g or k, or an equivalent of k, when any one of these letters begins an unaccented syllable and the n ends a preceding accented one, as in con'cord, con'gress, un'cle, &c. Pen'guin and a few other words are exceptions; also words beginning with the prefixes in, non, quinque, and un; as, in'come, non'conform'ity, quin'quevalve, un'compounded, &c. It is to be observed that, if the n ends an unaccented syllable, and the g or k begins an accented one, the n invariably retains its regular sound; as in con-cord'ant, con-gres'sional, &c.

It is also to be observed that in most derivative words, like hanger, singer, wronger (from hang, sing, and wrong), the g is not sounded, but unites with the n to represent the sound which in the primitives just cited is represented by n alone. But in the comparative and superlative degrees of the three following words, namely, long, strong, and young, and also in the words diphthongal and triphthongal (from diphthong and triphthong), the g is always, though very irregularly, pronounced, taking its hard sound, as in go; thus, lon'ger, stron'ger, &c. It is further to be observed that there is a small class of words in which the n has its ordinary sound, as in nail, and the g its soft sound, as in gem. Of this class, the words danger, stranger, ginger, and plunger are examples.

§ 83. The sound of ng (unmarked), as in sing, singer, singly, &c.

NOTE. — This is a simple elementary sound, and is not (as might be supposed) a compound sound made up of the sound of n in conjunction with that of g. In forming ng, the tongue is placed in the same position as for forming g; the nostrils, however, are not completely closed, but yet so much so as to produce a marked resonance (somewhat similar to the sound of n), which may be continued to any length, as in sing, bring, &c. — See § 82.

P.

§ 84. The sound of p (unmarked), as heard in pay, ape, paper, apily, &c.

NOTE. — The position of the organs necessary for forming this sound is the same as for b, but the sound itself differs from that of b in being an utterance of the breath instead of the voice.

P has but one sound; it is silent when initial before n, s, and t, as in pneumatics, psalm, pshaw, ptarmigan. It is also silent or very indistinct when it occurs between m and t in the same syllable, as in tempt, exempt, &c.; but when preceded by m in the same syllable and followed by t or by k in the next syllable, it is more properly sounded; as in temp-ta'tion, exemp'tion, redemp'tion, consump'tive, sump'tuous, bump'kin, pump'kin, &c., though, in colloquial utterance, it is very often suppressed in words of this class. It is also mute in the following words, and in their derivatives: namely, raspberry, receipt, sempstress, accompt, and corps.

PH.

§ 85. This digraph (which is unmarked) occurs chiefly in words of Greek derivation, and has usually the sound of f, as in phantom, sylph, philosophy, &c. In Stephen it has the sound of v; and, according to most orthoëpists, it has the same sound in nephew (nev'ew), though in this country it has commonly its regular sound of f in that word.

Before th initial, ph is silent, as in phthisis; it is also silent in apophthegm. In diphthong, triphthong, ophthalmy, naphtha, and other allied words, together with their derivatives, the ph is often sounded as p, or the h may be regarded as silent.

Q.

§ 86. Q is followed in all cases by u, and these two letters, taken together, have usually the sound of kw, as in queen (kween), conquest (kɒŋkwest), &c. In a few words derived from the French, qu is sounded like k, as in coquette, quadrille, &c. It has the same sound in the common termination que, as in antique, oblique, burlesque, &c.

R.

§ 87. This letter (which is unmarked) may be viewed under three aspects:—

(1.) R as in rip, trip, carol, &c. (sometimes called rough, trilled, dental, or initial r).

In forming this sound, the tongue assumes nearly the same position as for d; but the voice, instead of being confined within the mouth, is suffered to flow freely over the tip of the tongue, producing a very slightly trilled and peculiarly liquid sound, closely resembling that of z in the mode of its formation, but not partaking of its harsh, buzzing quality; the difference between the two sounds, in this respect, resulting from the fact that the tip of the tongue is approximated more closely to the upper gum for z than for r. R is sometimes strongly trilled or rolled by a forcible expulsion of the voice; but in customary speech it is very gently pronounced, and any marked vibration of the tongue should be carefully avoided as a pedantic affectation. The sound here described is heard in English in the two following cases: 1. When r is not preceded by a vowel, as in ream, drum, prompt, spring; 2. When it stands between two vowels of which the first is short, as in baron, merit, spirit, florid. Often the r is doubled in the written word, as in barren, merry, torrid; but, in these cases, only one r is heard in the pronunciation, providing the preceding vowel is short.—See § 109.

(2.) R as in far, form, terse, surge, &c. (sometimes called smooth, palatal, guttural, obscure, or final r).

By most orthoëpists at the present day, the letter r, when it occurs before any consonant, or when final, is regarded as a distinct element from the last, and as formed by a slight vibration of the back part, or root, of the tongue against the extremity of the soft palate. Many writers, however, do not admit any such distinction in the sound of r, maintaining that the value of the letter (apart from the obscure vowel element described in No. 3) is uniform in all situations.

(3.) R, connected with a guttural vowel sound, as heard in such words as fare, mere, ire, ore, cure, poor, pure, &c. Here the character r represents two sounds; namely, an obscure vowel sound resembling that of u in urge, and a smooth or palatal r, so that the above words are pronounced fāur (see § 4), mēur, iur, &c.

§ 88. In the pronunciation of accurate speakers, r is never silent; but when it occurs after a long vowel or a diphthong in the same syllable, as in here, fur, murmur, our, mire, &c., it is commonly and entirely suppressed, both in the United States and the south of England. In the northern counties of England, and in Scotland and Ireland, with equal impropriety it is, when so situated, always trilled.

§ 89. In English usage, when the letter r is preceded in an accented syllable by a long vowel or a diphthong, and is followed by a vowel in the next syllable, it uniformly represents both the palatal, or smooth, and the dental, or trilled, sound of this letter, as in hero, iris, glory, lurid, pronounced hēr'ro, ir'ris, glōr'ry, lūr'id. In the United States, this double power of the letter r is chiefly, though not invariably, restricted to the derivatives of words ending in r or re preceded by a long vowel or a diphthong, as in poorer (poor'rer), from poor; boring (bōr'ring), from bore; airy (ār'ry), from air; peerage (peer'rage), from peer; wiry (wīr'ry), from wire; securing (secūr'ring), from secure; but, on the other hand, we say he'ro, ir'ris, glō'ry, lū'rid, &c., because these words are not derived from any other words in the language. In Scotland, however, the universal practice is to join the r in all cases to the following vowel; or, in other words, to give it only its dental or trilled sound; thus, pee'rage and he'ro, wī'ry and ir'ris, bō'ring and glō'ry, secū'ring and lū'rid, &c.

It is to be observed that those orthoëpists who maintain that r has one invariable sound, assert that the only peculiarity in the English pronunciation of such words as hero, iris, &c., and in the English and American pronunciation of such words as poorer, boring, &c., consists in the interposition between the r and the preceding vowel of an obscure vowel sound like that of u in urge, which obscure sound is omitted by the Scotch.

§ 90. S unmarked has its regular sharp or hissing sound, as in same, yes, massy, resting, &c.

NOTE.—This sound is an utterance of unvocal breath forced between the tip of the tongue and the upper gum, the tongue being placed in the proper position for sounding t and d. S always has this sound at the beginning, and frequently in the middle and at the end, of words.—See § 108.

§ 91. S, when marked thus, ſ, ſ, has the buzzing sound of z in zeal, as in has, amuse, rosy, &c.—See § 108.

NOTE.—There has been much diversity among orthoëpists as to the sound of s in words commencing in dis, as disarm, disburse, &c. Walker laid down this rule:—"It [s] ought always to be pronounced like z when unaccented and followed by an accented flat mute [b, d, g hard, v], a liquid [l, m, n, r], or a vowel." Hence he gave pronunciations like the following: disbud, dizbud; disedify, dizedify; disjoin, dizjoin; dislike, dizlike; dislodge, dizlodge, &c. Scarcely any subsequent orthoëpist has gone so far. Webster's Dictionary gives s the sound of z in the following words only: namely, disarm, disaster, discern, disease, disheir, dishonest, dishonor, dismal, disown, dissolve.

There are a few verbs ending in se, which are also used as nouns or adjectives. To distinguish between them, the s is vocalized in the verb, and whispered in the noun or adjective; as close, a., and close, v.; house, n., and house, v.; use, n., and use, v.; diffuse, a., and diffuse, v.

§ 92. When the letter s, having regularly its sharp or hissing sound, follows a liquid or another s, and precedes a letter having the sound of consonant y, as i in reversion, mansion, passion, and, in a few cases, when it precedes ū (=yoo), as in sure, sugar, censure, sensual, the sounds represented by these letters are exchanged for that of the simple but very similar element represented by sh. Thus the examples just given are actually pronounced re-ver'shun, man'shun, pash'un, shoor, shōog'ar, cen'shoor, sen'shoo-al, though the theoretical pronunciation would be re-vers'yun, mans'yun, puss'yun, s-yoor, s-yōog'ar, cen'syoor, sen'syoo-al.

In a few words, s alone takes the sound of sh, as in nau-sea, Asiatic; or rather the e or i, in such cases, does double duty, uniting with the s to signify the sound of sh, and at the same time retaining its usual vowel character.

§ 93. When s is preceded by a vowel in an accented syllable, and is followed by a vowel having regularly or theoretically the sound of consonant y, these two letters are commonly pronounced like zh, as in adhesion, revision, explosion, confusion, pleasure, visual, usury, &c. (See § 107.) So also in scission, abscission, rescission, though the s is not preceded by a vowel in the accented syllable.

§ 94. S is silent in the words aisle, isle, island, demesne, huisine, viscount, and generally at the end of French words adopted into English, as chamois, corps, vis-a-vis, &c.

Sh.

§ 95. This digraph (which is unmarked) represents the simple sound heard in shelf, flesh, usher, &c.

NOTE.—This element is formed by a partial contact of the upper surface of the tongue, near the tip, with that side of the arch or dome of the palate which is just above the gums of the front teeth, and by an effusion of unvoiced breath through the narrow aperture left for its escape. Organically considered, the sound is intermediate between those of s and consonant y; genetically considered, it has been evolved from the combination of these two sounds, which, in rapid utterance, do not easily maintain their distinct character. Thus, if we pronounce the word special in three syllables, spe'ci-al, and then try to reduce it to two, we shall find that it is difficult to articulate the c (=s) and the i (=y) by one continuous effort of the organs, and that the intermediate sh is naturally substituted as an easier and a closely allied sound. So with version, mission, sure, &c. In motion, and other words ending in tion not preceded by s or by x, we may suppose the t to have been originally sounded like s, as in words of the same class in French; or the process of development may have been, first, mo'ti-on (with the t kept pure); then mōt'yun; next mōt'shun or mo'chun (see § 66); and finally, by sinking the t, mo'shun.

Sh is never silent. It is expressed: 1. By c, as in oceanic, e-ma-ci-a'tion; 2. By s, as in nau'se-ate, A-si-a'tic; 3. By t, as in ne-go-ti-a'tion; 4. By ce, as in o'cean; 5. By ci, as in so'cial; 6. By se, as in nau'seous; 7. By si, as in ten'sion; 8. By ti, as in cap'tious; 9. By the si implied in xi (=ksi), as in noxious; 10. By the sy implied in su (=syoo), as in men-su-ra'tion (men-shoo-ra'shun); 11. By the sy implied in xu (=ksyoo), as in lux'u-ry (lnk'shoo-ry); 12. By ch, as in chaise, char'la-tan, ma-chine; 13. By chs, as in fu'chsi-a; 14. By sc, as in con-sci-en'tious; 15. By sch, as in schol; 16. By sci, as in con'science.—See §§ 63, 92, 97, 104.

In some words, particularly those ending in ciate and tiate, some orthoëpists and speakers pronounce the vowel distinctly after the c or t sounded as sh; as, enunciate

(e-nūn'shī-ate), expatiate (eks-pā'shī-ate), &c.; others pronounce it with a slight sound, as of a very brief or half-suppressed e, represented in the Dictionaries of Smart and Cooley by an apostrophe, thus, enunciate (e-nūn'sh'ate), expatiate (eks-pā'sh'ate), &c.; others, again, as Sheridan, Perry, and Dr. Webster, considering it an error to use the vowel twice, pronounce these terminations, and others like them, in one syllable; as, enunciate (e-nūn'shate), expatiate (eks-pā'shate), &c. In this Dictionary, however, these terminations are given in two syllables (-shī-ate), in accordance with what is believed to be the best and most general usage; but a reference to the present section is generally appended to words of this class, that the inquirer may not be left in ignorance of the fact that there is a want of uniformity in their pronunciation.

§ 96. The sound of t (unmarked) as heard in tone, note, noted, assets, &c.

NOTE.—This sound differs from that of d (see § 70) only in being a whispered and not a vocal utterance; that is to say, the position or configuration of the articulating organs is the same in both cases, but for d the breath, confined within the mouth by a close contact of the fore part of the tongue with the upper gum, is vocalized and rendered audible in a sort of murmur heard before the organs separate, while for t it is kept pure or unvoiced, and cannot therefore be heard until the contact is forcibly broken.

T is silent in the terminations ten and tle after s, as in fasten, listen, often, castle, gristle, throstle, &c. It is also silent in the words chestnut, Christmas, hostler, or ostler, mistletoe, and mortgage.

§ 97. When t precedes any one of the diphthongs ia, ie, and io, and at the same time follows an accented syllable not ending in s or x, it assumes, in some words, the sound of sh, as in negotiation; but, in most cases, the compound sound resulting from the coalescence of t and i is exchanged for that of sh, as in patient, station, partial, &c. When s or x precedes the t, this letter and the i following it either preserve their own sounds pure, or exchange them for the sound of ch in chin, as in question (kwest'yun or kwes'ehun), mixture (mikst'yun or miks'ehun), &c.—See § 66, NOTE, and § 95.

Th.

§ 98. Th unmarked has its sharp or whispered sound, as in thing, breath, author, athlete, &c.

NOTE.—This is the sound made in lisping. It is produced by putting the point of the tongue between the teeth, or by placing it against the back of the upper front teeth, and forcing out unintonated breath.

Th has this sound generally at the beginning and at the end of words; but there are some exceptions.

§ 99. Th marked thus, Th, th, has its soft, flat, or vocal sound, as in thine, then, with, mother, writhed, &c.

NOTE.—This sound differs from the foregoing only in being an utterance of voice instead of simple breath. It occurs chiefly between two vowels in words purely English, as in leather, with, heathen; also at the end of the verbs mouth, bequeath, and smooth: and when followed by a final e mute, as in breathe, clothe, &c.

Nouns which, in the singular, end in th sharp, usually preserve the same sound in the plural, as death, deaths; sabbath, sabbaths, &c.; but in the plurals of the following seven words the th is vocal; namely, bath, cloth, lath, mouth, oath, path, and wreath, as, baths, cloths, laths, paths, &c. Some pronounce truths, in the plural, with the vocal sound (truths), but this is sanctioned by no orthoëpist.

Although th in with has its vocal sound, yet in the compounds herewith, therewith, and wherewith, it is, according to the orthoëpists, pronounced with its sharp or whispered sound. Good usage, however, allows it to retain in the compound the same sound that it has in the simple word.

§ 100. Th has the sound of t in phthisic (tiz'ik), thyme (tīm), and their derivatives; and also in the proper names Thomas (tom'as) and Thames (temz.) This is also its sound in all modern European languages except the Greek. In asthma and isthmus, it is said by the orthoëpists to have the same sound; but the great majority of speakers, in the United States at least, entirely suppress the th, pronouncing the former word āz'mā or ās'mā, and the latter is'mus or iz'mus. — See § 108.

V.

§ 101. The sound of v (unmarked), as in vane, leave, civil, &c.

NOTE. — This sound differs from that of f only in being an utterance of the voice instead of the breath, the organs assuming precisely the same position for both sounds.

V is never silent, except in severnigh (sen'nit), which is also written sennigh, and, according to some orthoëpists, in the word twelvemonth, colloquially pronounced twel'munth.

W.

§ 102. At the beginning of a word or of a syllable, as wel, worse, inward, this letter (which is unmarked) is a consonant, formed from, and nearly resembling, the vowel ōo, but requiring for its utterance a closer position, or greater contraction, of the labial aperture; and this compression of the lips changes the quality of the sound, giving it a buzzing and articulative, instead of a smooth and purely vocal, character.

NOTE. — Some writers, however, maintain that the sound is merely that of a brief oo; in other words, that it is no consonant at all; but a simple experiment will serve to show the incorrectness of this view. If w is the same as oo, the word wōō must be equivalent to oo pronounced twice in succession; but ōō-ōō' is evidently a word of two syllables, and wōō, as universally pronounced, is confessedly a monosyllable. Another consideration will help to establish the consonantal nature of w. Like the other consonants, it is capable of stopping or shutting a vowel, that is, of causing it to assume its regular short sound, as in the cockney pronunciation of very as vē'wy, of marry as mā'wy, of horrid as hō'wid, &c.

After a vowel in the same syllable, w is generally silent, as in glōw, thrōwn, &c.; though sometimes significant, as in flaw. With e it unites to form a diphthong, which is generally sounded like long u, as in dew, few, new; but it is sounded like ōō, or like u in rude, if the letter r stands before it, as in crew, shrew, &c. It is often joined with a preceding o to represent the diphthongal sound otherwise expressed by ou, as in brow, cow, town, &c. — See § 39.

W is always silent before r in the same syllable, as in wring (ring), wrote (rōt), awry (ā-rī'); also in the words answer (an'ser), sword (sōrd), toward (to'ard), two (too).

It is often represented by u occurring before another vowel in the same syllable, as quail, query, languid, as-suage, &c.

Wh.

§ 103. The true sound of these letters is in the reverse order, namely, hw, as they were written by the Anglo-Saxons; e. g., whet is pronounced hwet. The h is here a free emission of breath through the position taken by the lips in the formation of w, the vocal cords being all the while completely relaxed. (See § 76.) Many recent phonologists, however, contend that the combination wh represents a simple whisper of the ordinary w, to which it stands in the same relation as any surd consonant does to its corresponding sonant. Those who hold this opinion not only wrongly apprehend and describe their own pronunciation, but they overlook the fact, that, as a closer approximation of the lips in pronouncing oo-et changes the sound to wet, so hoo-et in like manner gives rise to whet; and they forget that all words of this class originally began with an aspiration or a guttural, as their etymological history clearly shows. Thus what is from the A.-S. hwæt, O. Sax. huat, Icel. hvater, &c. Compare also Scot. quhile and English while, Lat. quid and English what. In who, whole, whoop, whore, and their derivatives, the w is silent.

X.

§ 104. This letter has two sounds; namely, its regular sharp sound (unmarked) like ks, as in expect, tax, &c., and its soft or flat sound (marked X, x) like gz, as in exist, example, &c.

NOTE. — This latter sound usually occurs when the syllable which immediately follows the x begins with an accented vowel, as in auxiliary, exert, exalt, luxurious, and sometimes also in the derivatives of such words, even though the x is under the accent, as in exemplary, exhalation, &c.

In anxious, noxious, luxury, and a few other words, the s which is the second element of the x, and the following i or the first element of the following u, instead of retaining their usual sound of y, are generally exchanged for the sound of sh; thus, ank'shus, uok'shus, luk'shoo-ry. &c.

At the beginning of words, x has the sound of z, as in xanthic (zan'-), xebec (ze'-), xylography (zī-), &c.

§ 105. The sound of y (unmarked), as in yawn, year, young, beyond, &c.

NOTE. — This sound — which is heard in English only at the beginning of a word or a syllable — is formed from the vowel e by a closer approximation of the tongue to the roof of the mouth, which destroys the pure vocalicity of the e. As w is often confounded with oo, so y is often confounded with e; but it may be proved to be a distinct sound by an experiment on the word ye similar to that by which w was shown to be distinct from oo. — See § 102.

In the middle or at the end of a syllable, y is a vowel, and has precisely the sound that i would have in the same situation. — See §§ 15, 16, 35, 48, 54, &c.

Y is often represented by i, when this letter occurs in an unaccented syllable before another vowel, and, at the same time, follows an accented syllable, as in fami-liar, min-ion, pon-iard, &c.

Z.

§ 106. The regular and leading sound of this letter (which is unmarked) is heard in zone, maze, hazy, frozen, &c. It is the vocal or sonant form of s. (See § 90.) In a few words it takes the sound of zh, as in seizure (sē'zhoor), &c. (See § 107.) In rendezvous it is silent.

Zh.

§ 107. This sound is the vocal correspondent of sh, and is uttered with the organs in precisely the same position.

NOTE. — It has arisen, in all English words, from an attempt to pronounce the sound of z in maze (see § 106) and that of consonant y (see § 105) in immediate succession. On account of the vicinity of the contacts represented by zh and y, the effort to do this causes the tongue to assume the position requisite for sounding zh, or nearly so; and hence zh was naturally substituted as being a very similar sound of easier utterance. Thus, fusion may be supposed to have been originally pronounced fūz'yūn, and then fu'zhūn; grazier, first grāz'yer, and then grāzh'er. — See § 95.

The combination zh is used in works on pronunciation to indicate the sound here described, on account of the relationship of this sound to that commonly expressed by the digraph sh. But the two letters zh never come together in the proper orthography of any English word. The sound for which they stand is represented by zi (when the z occurs in, or is immediately preceded by, an accented syllable, and the i is followed by another vowel and occurs in an unaccented syllable, as in glazier); by the zy implied in zu (= zyoo), as in azure; by s in symposium, &c.; by si in certain situations (see § 93); by ti in the single word transition, as sometimes pronounced; and by g in one or two words adopted from the French, as rouge.

ASSIMILATION OF CONSONANTS.

§ 108. When a whispered and a vocal consonant come together in the same syllable, it is generally very difficult, in fluent pronunciation, to preserve each in its regular and appropriate sound. Hence it frequently becomes necessary to change the character of the one or of the other, in order to make the combination readily pronounceable. This is generally done, in English, by assimilating the sound of the second consonant, whether whispered or vocal, to that of the first. Thus, in chintz, the vocal consonant z assumes the sound of its whispered correspondent s, in order to unite with the whispered t. On the other hand, the s in winds is vocalized, or assumes the sound of z, for the sake of corresponding with the vocal d. Sometimes, though rarely, the sound of the first consonant is assimilated to that of the second, as in spasm (spazm).

This affinity between these two classes of consonants is an important fact, and one which needs to be familiarly known. For there are four very common inflectional terminations which invariably come under its influence, namely: 1. Possessive forms in s, as maid's (maidz); 2. Plurals in s, as tubs (tubz), groves (grōvz); 3. S in the third person singular of verbs, as loads (loadz), smooths (smoothz); 4. Preterits and participles in d preceded by e mute, as in dashed (dasht), ingulfed (ingulft).

It is necessary to observe, that there are a few words ending in dth, as breadth, hundredth, &c., where the aspirate th is not assimilated to the vocal d; and also that, after ng, and the liquids l, m, n, r, — all of which are vocal consonants, — a whispered consonant can be pronounced without difficulty, and actually is pronounced, as in melt, terse, tempt (temt), fence, strength, &c.

DUPLICATION OF CONSONANTS.

§ 109. In many words, a consonant is doubled between two vowels; yet, in such cases, no more than one articulation is ever used in speaking. In banner, for example, we close the organs but once between the first and second syllables; nor is it possible to use both of the letters n without pronouncing ban, then intermitting the voice entirely, opening the organs, and closing them a second time. Hence, in all cases, when the same consonant is written twice between vowels, as in banner, robbing, madden, letter, horrid, one of them only is represented by an articulation of the organs; and the only reason for repeating the consonant is to indicate the fact that the preceding vowel has its short sound.

But, although only one articulation is ever used, or, in fluent speech, possibly can be used, where a consonant is written twice, yet in some words the articulation is dwelt upon for an appreciable space of time, producing an apparent duplication of the sound. This effect takes place in many derived words in which the primitive ends or begins with the same letter as that with which a superadded suffix or prefix of English origin respectively begins or ends, as in soulless, foully, keenness, misstep, outravel, unnatural. The same effect takes place in most compound words, in which the second part begins with the same sound as that with which the first part ends, as in post-town, head-dress, half-filled. — See § 127.

ACCENT.

§ 110. Accent is a particular stress or effort of voice upon certain syllables of words, which distinguishes them from the others by a greater distinctness and loudness of pronunciation. Accent is of two kinds, primary, as in intend', where the full force of the voice is on the last syllable, and secondary, as in su'per-in-tend', where the first syllable is distinguished by a stress greater than that laid on the second and third syllables, though less than that laid on the last. In some words there are two secondary or subordinate accents, as in in-com'pre-hen'si-bil'i-ty.

NOTE. — (1.) The general tendency of accent, whether primary or secondary, is to shorten all vowels but u, when further back than the penultimate syllable, as in tentement, neg'essariness, an'atom'ical, person'ification, &c.; but we say lū'bricate, and not līb'ricate; tru'culency, and not trūc'ulency; sū'perabun'dant, and not sūp'erabun'dant, &c. This tendency generally fails, if the accented syllable is followed by two unaccented vowels, as in pe'ri-od, ma'ni-ac; or by two vowels of which the former only is unaccented, as in de'vi-a'tion, o'ri-en'tal.

(2.) The primary and secondary accents are, in certain cases, so nearly equal that we interchange them freely, "making," as Walker remarks, "the secondary principal and the principal secondary." He specifies violin, referee, privateer, artisan, courtesan, charlatan, and might have added ambuscade, cavalcade, caricature, etiquette, reverie, confidante, governante, invalid, n., parachute, and others. Nearly all of these, except the first three, have now (according to able orthoëpists) transferred the primary accent from the last to the first syllable, as in artisan, &c., under the operation of a principle which is stated in § 117.

(3.) Many in this country give a marked secondary accent in certain words which properly have but one accent, and that on a pre-antepenultimate syllable, as in ter'ri-tō'ry, diffi-cūl'ty, cir'cum-stān'ces, in'ter-est'ing, &c. This droning fault may be corrected by giving the accented syllable a sharp percussion, which carries the voice lightly through the rest of the word. It is also a vulgar American custom, in many words having an unaccented initial syllable followed by an accented one, to lay a nearly equal stress of voice on both, as in ex'act'ly, gā'gan'tic, vital'ic, pō'liti'cal, prē'cisely, sāl'va'tion, stū'pen'dous.

DIVIDED USAGE.

§ 111. In quite a large number of words, there is a diversity of practice among good speakers as to the place of the primary accent. This arises mainly from a conflict between certain great principles which affect the seat of the accent. A few of these will now be mentioned, with a view to account for this diversity. It is all that can be done in a brief sketch like this.

§ 112. FIRST PRINCIPLE. — Derivatives take for a time, if not permanently, the accent of the original words from which they are formed, as resolve', from resol'vo, aspect' (Shakespeare, Milton), from aspectus, Hindustan'ee, from Hindustan', &c. So also words derived from other English words by adding one or more syllables to their beginning or end, as within', from in, improp'ier, from prop'ier, po'et-ess, from po'et, pleas'antly, from pleas'ant, ser'viceable, from ser'vice, re-adjust'ment, from adjust', &c.

§ 113. SECOND PRINCIPLE. — Ease of utterance has some influence in deciding the place of the accent. Ac'ceptable, re'ceptacle, and utensil, fashionable in the days of Walker, have now taken the easier accentuation of accept'able, re- cept'acle, and uten'sil. Dis'crepant and dis'crepancy are marked discrep'ant and discrep'an'cy by Richardson, Boag, Craig, Wright, Clarke, and others. Subal'tern (instead of Walker's sub'al'tern) is the accentuation of Richardson, Knowles, Barclay, Craig, Clarke, and many more. Dys'p'sy has taken the place of dys'pepsy in the marking of Webster, Smart, Cull, Wright, Clarke, Cooley, &c., and is now the prevailing accentuation. On the same ground, ances'tral is preferred to an'cestral by Jameson, Webster, Boag, Clarke, and Cull, in conformity with campest'ral and other similar words. Confes'sor, like profes'sor, has superseded confessor in this country, and has the support of Perry, Ash, Rees, Barclay, Boag, Clarke, Cull, Webster, and Worcester. Rem'ediless, from the difficulty of the sound, has been changed in this country into remed'iless, as sanctioned by Perry, Ash, Rees, Fulton and Knight, and Webster. Con'sistory has given way to consist'ory in the marking of Knowles, Barclay, Reid, Brande, Craig, Boag, Clarke, Cooley, and others. In like manner, ac'cessary and ac'cessory (as marked in most English Dictionaries) are commonly pronounced in this country acces'sary and acces'sory, as recommended by Bailey and Ash. These may serve as instances of the application of this principle. It is an important one in its place; and, though it may give rise for a time to a diversity of pronunciation (since some will cling to that which is older and harder), changes of this kind, which promote ease of utterance, will finally prevail.

DISSYLLABLES.

§ 114. THIRD PRINCIPLE. — In words of two syllables, there is a tendency (though with numerous exceptions) to accent the former or penultimate syllable, as in a'gue, bar'ion, com'mon, dis'cord, &c.

NOTE. — (1.) This tendency meets with a powerful counteraction in Principle No. 1, namely, that of derivatives retaining the accent of their primitives, as in amuse', deter', offend', &c. It is natural, in such formatives, to place the accent on the radical part of the word; and hence some hundreds of our dissyllables, especially verbs and adverbs, have their accent on the last syllable.

(2.) Still, there is a constant struggle (especially among the common people, who are unacquainted with the derivation of words) to draw back the accent to the first syllable. Here arises another conflict, which produces a diversity of accent; and the common people, being a majority, are, on the whole, slowly gaining upon those who are tenacious of Principle No. 1. Hence, con'nate and in'nate (instead of connate' and innate') are generally prevalent in this country, and are now sanctioned by Reid, Boag, Craig, and others. Al'cove (for alcove') is more common among us, and it is so marked by recent English orthoëpists, Boag, Craig, Cull, and others. Con'tents (for contents') has become the general usage of this country, as sanctioned by Cull, Clarke, Webster, and Worcester. Re'tail (for retail') is now the marking of a majority of the orthoëpists. De'tail (for detaill') is less prevalent, but is sanctioned by Smart, Clarke, Cull, Cooley, &c. Pro'lix and pre'text (for prolix' and pretext') are widely prevalent (especially the former), and are authorized by some recent lexicographers. Bom'bast (for bombast') is the accentuation of Walker, Barclay, Richardson, Cull, and Webster; it is admitted by Worcester, and is extensively used in this country. Bu'reau (for bureau') was admitted by Dr. Webster, and is very generally applied to the article of furniture, while bureau' is sometimes used in reference to a department of the government. Ac'cess (for access') is authorized by a number of orthoëpists, and especially, among the later ones, by Knowles, Boag, Wright, Clarke, and Cull.

(3.) No orthoëpist has given any sanction, it is believed, to ro'mance and fi'nance (for romance' and finance'), or to re'search and re'source (for research' and resource'), though these pronunciations are not infrequently heard in America. The two last ought especially to be discountenanced: for search and source are English words, and should therefore remain (as they were from the first) the chief objects of thought.

§ 115. We have about eighty cases among our dissyllables in which the same word is used for a verb on the one hand, and a noun or an adjective on the other. To distinguish between them, we accent the nouns and the adjectives on the first syllable, and the verbs on the last, as, a con'vert, to convert'; a con'tract, to contract', &c. It is unnecessary to give the list in full, since the accent of nearly all these words has been long settled by general usage.

NOTE. — There are a few cases of divided use in nouns, which will sooner or later be made to conform to the general rule. For example, usage will probably soon fix permanently on per'fect for the adjective, and perfect' for the verb; per'mit for the noun, and permit' for the verb; pro'test for the noun, and protest' for the verb; per'fume for the noun, and perfume' for the verb; pro'ceeds for the noun, and proceed' for the verb; de'tail for the noun, and detaill' for the verb; in'crease for the noun, and increase' for the verb; re'tail for the noun, and retail' for the verb; sur'vey for the noun, and survey' for the verb.

There is a tendency among many to accent the first syllable of the noun ally, allies; and, although without sanction as yet from a single orthoëpist, it would not be surprising if this tendency should prevail on the ground stated above, making the noun al'ly, al'lies, and the verb ally'. The noun cement has been extensively pronounced cem'ent, as distinguished from the verb to cement'; but Smart thinks this will not finally prevail; and the tendency does certainly now seem to be toward cement' for the noun as well as the verb.

§ 116. We have a few dissyllables which are at once nouns and adjectives. These are distinguished by accenting the nouns on the first syllable, and the adjectives on the last.

NOUNS.

Au'gust, the month.
Com'pact, an engagement.
Ex'ile, banishment.
In'stinct, an impulse.
Min'ute (of time).
Su'pine (in grammar).

ADJECTIVES.

August', noble.
Compact', close.
Exile', small, slender.
Instinct', animated.
Minute', very small.
Supine', indolent.

The word gallant departs from the above rule. When it denotes a suitor, or "attentive to ladies," it is accented gallant', and is changed into gal'lant when it means high-spirited or daring.

TRISYLLABLES AND POLYSYLLABLES.

§ 117. FOURTH PRINCIPLE. — In words of three or more syllables, there is a strong tendency to accent the antepe'nult, or third syllable from the end, as in el'oquent, ac'ci'dent, oppo'tu'nity.

NOTE. — This tendency is counteracted by that of derivation (Principle No. 1. See § 112); and here arises another "conflict," which, to some extent, arrays our scholars on the one side, and the body of the people on the other. Many scholars, for example, are strongly inclined to say contem'plate, demon'strate, confis'cate, obdu'rate, &c. (forgetting that they come from participles, contempla'tus, demonstra'tus, &c.), because by Latin rules their second syllable is long; while the mass of the people, who know nothing of Latin, and are governed by English analogies, are equally bent on saying con'template, dem'onstrate, ob'durate, &c. The latter pronunciation is now very extensively heard, and thus we have a "divided usage" in respect to these and similar words. There is a class of botanical and mineralogical terms ending in phyllous and phyllite (from Gr. φύλλον, a leaf), as quadriphyllous, anthophyllite, &c., in which the same struggle is going on. Words having these terminations are differently accented by different authorities, and sometimes even by the same authority. Knowles, Gray, and Worcester are the only authorities who are self-consistent in their pronunciation of such words—Knowles accenting them all on the antepenult, Gray as uniformly on the penult, and Worcester giving an alternative in every case, the penultimate accentuation being his preference. There can be no doubt that that mode of pronunciation which places the accent on the antepenult is most in accordance with the genius of our language; and, in all probability, it will ultimately prevail over the learning or the pedantry of those who contend for the penultimate accentuation. In like manner, balcony (for balco'ny) has now, according to Smart, become the true English pronunciation, and is so marked by Knowles, Webster, Cull, Wright, Cooley, and many more.

Ele'giac (for el'gi'ac) is the general pronunciation of this country (in accordance with maniac and most other words in -iac), and has the sanction of Perry, Knowles, Wright, Clarke, Cull, Cooley, and Webster. Quan'dary (for quau-da'ry), in accordance with boundary and nearly every other word of three syllables in -ary, is our prevailing pronunciation, and is sanctioned by Maunder, Cull, Craig, Clarke, Cooley, Worcester, and Webster. Many are disposed to reduce vaga'ry to the same accentuation (va'gary).

§ 118. It is a just principle, laid down by Walker, that "when words come to us whole from the Greek or Latin, the same accent ought to be preserved as in the original." Hence the following words ought to be accented as here marked: namely, Abdo'men, hori'zon, deco'rum, diplo'ma, muse'um, sond'rous, acu'men, bitu'men, and, on like grounds, furra'go, and others. Yet the strong tendency of our language to accent the antepenultimate in all words of three or more syllables has caused this principle to be violated in some cases, as in am'azon, cic'atrix, min'ister, or'ator, pleth'ora, &c.

§ 119. Words of more than two syllables having the same orthography are generally distinguished by a difference of accent, as at'tribute, n., and attrib'ute, v., miscon'duct, n., and misconduct', v., o'verthrow, n., and overthrow', v. In such cases, the nouns have the accent further from the end.

§ 120. With a very few exceptions, words of more than two syllables having the following terminations take the accent on the antepenult, or last syllable but two:—

-cracy; as, *democ'rac*y, *theoc'rac*y;
-ferous; as, sounnifer'ous, umbellifer'ous;
-fluent; as, af'fluent, circum'fluent;
-fluus; as, melliflu'ous, super'fluus;
-gonal; as, diag'onal, hexag'onal;
-gony; as, cosmog'ony, theog'ony;
-grapher; as, lexicog'rapher, stenog'rapher;
-graphy; as, photog'raphy, typog'raphy;
-loger; as, philol'oger, astrol'oger;
-logist; as, entomol'ogist, physiol'ogist;
-logy; as, chronol'ogy, mythol'ogy;
-loquy; as, col'loquy, solil'oquy;
-machy; as, logom'achy, theom'achy;
-mathy; as, chrestom'athy, polym'athy;
-meter; as, barom'eter, hygrom'eter;
-metry; as, altim'etry, geom'etry;
-nomy; as, astron'omy, econ'omy;
-parous; as, ovip'arous, vivip'arous;
-pathy; as, ap'athy, antip'athy;
-phony; as, antiph'ony, coloph'ony;
-scopy; as, acros'copy, deuteros'copy;
-strophe; as, apos'trophe, catas'trophe;

-tomy; as, anat'omy, lithot'omy;
*-troph*y; as, at'trophy, hyper'trophy;
-vorous, as, flammi'v'orous, igniv'orous;
-vorous, as, carniv'orous, graminiv'orous.

§ 121. Words of more than two syllables, ending in -cate, -date, -gate, -fy, -tude, and -ty, preceded by a vowel, have, for the most part, the accent on the antepenult: as, depre'cate, rust'icate, recip'rocate; an'tedate, elu'cidate, ac-com'modate; prop'agate, del'egate, fu'nigate; rur'efy, sanc'tify; qui'etude, lat'itude; soci'ety, acid'ity, dep'uty.

§ 122. The penultimate syllable is to be accented in almost all words having the sound of sh, of zh, or of consonant y immediately before their last vowel or diphthong; e. g., donat'ion, conces'sion, illu'sion, controver'sial, ver-mil'ion, opin'ion.

THE TERMINATIONS IC AND ICS.

§ 123. Words ending in ic and ics (derivatives from words in ικος or icus, in Greek or Latin, or formed after the same analogy) have their accent on the penult; as, epi-dem'ic, scientif'ic, &c. The following words are exceptions, having the accent on the antepenult; namely, ag'aric, Ar'abic, arith'metic, ar'senic, n., cath'olic, chol'eric, ephem'eric, her'etic, lu'natic, pleth'oric, pol'itic, rhet'oric, and tur'meric. Climacteric has usually the antepenultimate accent, though some pronounce it climacter'ic. In like manner, the nouns empiric and schismatic, and the noun and adjective sple-netic, are sometimes accented on the penult, and sometimes on the antepenult.

THE TERMINATIONS E-AL, E-AN, AND E-UM.

§ 124. A part of the words having these terminations follow the English analogy, and take the antepenultimate accent; as, cerule'an, hyperbo'rean, Hercule'an, Mediterra-nean, subterra'nean, Tarta'rean, marmo'rean; petro'leum, perios'teum, succeda'neum. A part accent the penult; as, adamante'an, Atlant'ean, colosse'an, empyre'an, Epicure'an, Europe'an, pygme'an; mausole'um, muse'um. Orphean, being derived from Or'pheus (or'fūs), is more properly accented Or'phean. Most words ending in eal accent the antepenult; as, lin'eal, ethe'real, funere'al; but hymene'al and ide'al take the accent upon the penult.

THE TERMINATION OSE.

§ 125. There is a considerable number of adjectives ending in ose, as animose, comatose, operose, &c., in the accentuation of which the dictionaries are at variance with each other, and many of them inconsistent with themselves. But all words of this class, as Walker remarks, ought, from their form and derivation, to be pronounced alike. Walker himself accents them all upon the last syllable, and in this he is followed by Worcester and Cooley; but, in trisyllables having this termination, most recent authorities, following the natural tendency of the language, as well as the prevailing usage, give only a secondary accent to the last syllable, placing the principal accent on the antepenult. (See § 110, NOTE, second paragraph.) As to dissyllabic adjectives ending in ose, as jocose, verbose, mo-rose, &c., they take the accent on the last syllable, with a few exceptions.

§ 126. In poetry, words are frequently used with an accentuation different from that adopted in ordinary speech, as in the following examples:—

'Twixt that and reason what a nice barrier !
Forever separate, yet forever near. Pope.

Ye icefalls ! ye that from the mountain's brow
Adown enormous rav'ines slope amain. Coleridge.

§ 127. When two words of similar formation and the same accentuation are contrasted with each other, the accent is transferred to the syllable of difference (unless this is already accented, as in em'inent, im'minent), and the regularly accented syllable takes a secondary accent ; thus, undo' is pronounced un'do' when opposed to do or to out'do', and inter'vene' is pronounced in'terven'e' when used antithetically to su'perven'e'. So also with am'putation and im'putation, bi'en'nial and tri'en'nial, op'pose', and sup'pose' ; ex'cr'cise, and ex'or'cise, al-le'gation and al-li'gation ; proph'et' and prof'it' ; do'nor' and do'ne'e', guar'an'tor' and guar'an'tee'.

§ 128. When separately pronounced, all monosyllabic words have their vowel as distinctly sounded as if under accent. But in connected discourse, certain classes of monosyllables, such as articles, prepositions, pronouns, conjunctions, and auxiliary verbs, are usually unemphasized, and their vowel is liable to the same corruption of quality as that in an unaccented syllable of a word. But when used antithetically to other words, they are emphasized, receiving a full and distinct stress of voice. Thus, the possessive pronoun their, when emphatic, should take the full sound of ê ; as, "Their (thêr) interests, and not yours, are to be consulted." But when unemphatic, the sound becomes more obscure, verging toward, or falling into, that of the neutral vowel (u in urge) ; as, "They will not neglect their (thur) interests." So, also, there, when used as an adverb of place, is distinctly pronounced with the appropriate sound of the vowel ; as, "I shall be there (thêr)." When, however, it serves merely to introduce a verb or a sentence, it takes the obscurer sound ; as, "There (thur) is no difficulty in the case." In like manner we say â, your, thât, thê, frôm, fôr, &c., when we pronounce the words by themselves ; but in actual use they become nearly or quite û, yur, thût, thû, frûm, fur, &c. The following passage from the "Spectator," No. 80, well illustrates this tendency to a corruption of the vowel sound in unemphasized monosyllables : — "My lords, with humble submission thât that I say is this, that thât that thât gentleman has advanced is not thât that he should have proved to your lordships."

SYLLABICATION.

§ 129. Words are sometimes divided into syllables for the sole purpose of showing their proper pronunciation (as, a-dorn, o-void) ; and sometimes in order to exhibit their etymological composition merely, without the least regard to their pronunciation (as, ad-orn, or-oid). In ordinary cases — as where a word requires to be divided at the end of a line — these modes of syllabication are to a certain extent combined. In the United States, the etymological principle is allowed to operate only in separating prefixes, suffixes, and grammatical terminations from the radical part of the word, where this can be done without misrepresenting the pronunciation. In English practice, however, words are usually divided in such a manner as to show their constituent parts independently of the pronunciation (as, hypo-thesis, philo-sophy, belli-gerent, &c.), and a single consonant or a consonant digraph between two vowels goes to the latter (as, a-na-to-my, de-li-cate, ma-the-mat-ics, &c.). In this Dictionary, words are uniformly divided so as to represent their pronunciation in the most accurate manner ; but very frequently the root of a word may be exhibited to the eye without violating the orthoëpical principle of syllabication, and where this is possible it has generally been done, more particularly in the case of accented syllables.

RULES FOR SPELLING CERTAIN CLASSES OF WORDS.

FOUNDED ON THE ORTHOGRAPHY OF DR. WEBSTER, AS EXHIBITED IN THIS VOLUME.

§ 130 (1). The letters f and l, at the end of monosyllables, and standing immediately after single vowels, are generally doubled ; as in staff, cliff, doff, puff ; all, bell, hull, toll, null. The words clef, if, of, and sol, are exceptions.

§ 131 (2). The letter s, at the end of a monosyllable, and standing immediately after a single vowel, is generally doubled, except when it is used to form the possessive case or plural of a noun, or the third person singular of a verb ; as in grass, press, hiss, moss, truss. The only important exceptions are as, gas, has, was, yes, his, is, thus, and us.

§ 132 (3). Besides f, l, and s, the only consonants that are ever doubled at the end of a word are b, d, g, m, n, p, r, t, and z. The following list contains all, or nearly all, the words in which these letters are doubled ; namely, abb, ebb ; add, odd, rudd ; bigg, egg, snigg ; lamm, scomm, mumm (to mask) ; inn, bunn ; wapp ; gnarr, parr, err, birr, shirr, skirr, burr, hurr, murr, purr ; mitt, plitt, smitt, butt ; fizz, fuzz, buzz, huzz, muzz.

NOTE. — The words let, net, and set are sometimes incorrectly spelled lett, nett, and sett ; and some other words which should have the final letter single are spelled, by some writers, with it doubled.

§ 133 (4). A consonant standing at the end of a word immediately after a diphthong or double vowel is never doubled. The words ail, peat, haul, door, and maim, are examples. The word guess is only an apparent exception, as the u does not strictly form a diphthong with the e, but serves merely to render the g hard.

§ 134 (5). Monosyllables ending, as pronounced, with the sound of k, and in which c follows the vowel, have usually k added after the c; as in black, fleck, click, knock, and buck. The words lac, sac, talc, zinc, ploc, roc, soc, arc, marc, orc, and fisc, are exceptions.

Words of more than one syllable, ending in ic or iac, which formerly ended in k, also words derived from the Latin or Greek languages, or from other sources, and similar to these, or formed in an analogous manner, are now written without the k; as, maniac, elegiac, cubic, music, public. The word derrick is an exception. Words of more than one syllable, in which c is preceded by other vowels than i or ia, commonly end in ck; as, arrack, barrack, hammock, hillock, wedlock. The words almanac, sandarac, limbec, xibec, manioc, and havoc, are exceptions. Almanac, limbec, and havoc, however, are sometimes written with k after the c, especially in England.

§ 135 (6). In derivatives formed from words ending in c, by adding a termination beginning with c, i, or y, the letter k is inserted after the c, in order that the latter may not be inaccurately pronounced like s before the following vowel: as, colic, colicky; traffic, trafficked, trafficking, trafficker; talc, talcky; zinc, zincky.

§ 136 (7). In derivatives formed by adding a termination beginning with a vowel to monosyllables and words accented on the last syllable, when these words end in a single consonant (except x) preceded by a single vowel, that consonant is doubled; as, clan, clannish; plan, planned, planning, planner; bag, baggage; hot, hotter, hottest; wit, witty; cabal, cabal'ler; abet, abet'ted, abet'ting, abet'tor; begin, begin'ning, begin'ner; infer, inferred, infer'ring. The consonant is doubled in these words in order to preserve the short sound of the vowel, as otherwise the latter would be liable to be pronounced long. Thus, planned, höttest, and abët'ted, would naturally be pronounced plāned, hōtest, and abët'ed, if the consonant were not doubled. Words of this class, in which the final consonant is preceded by qu followed by a single vowel, form no exception to the rule, since the u performs the office of the consonant w; as, squab, squabbish, squabby; squat, squatting, squatter; quit, quitted, quitting; acquit, acquitted, acquitt'ing.

The derivatives of the word gas (except gassed, gassing, and gassy) are written with but one s; as, gaseous, gaseity, gasify. Ex'cellence, as being from the Latin excellens, retains the double l, though one l has been dropped from the termination of excell'. Besides these, the only exceptions to the rule are those derivatives in which the accent of the primitive is thrown back upon another syllable: as, cabal, cab'al'ism, cab'al'ist; prefer, prefer'ence; refer, refer'ence; defer, defer'ence. It is no exception to this rule that chancellor, and the derivatives of metal and crystal, as metalloid, metallurgy, crystalline, crystallize, and the like, are written with the l doubled, since they are derived respectively from the Latin cancellarius (through the French), and metallum, and the Greek κρύσταλλος. So also the word tranquillity retains the double l as being from the Latin tranquillitas, while the English derivatives of tranquil, though often written with two l's, are more properly written with only one, as tranquilize, tranquilizer, and the like.

§ 137 (8). When a diphthong, or a digraph representing a vowel sound, precedes the final consonant of a word, or the accent of a word ending in a single consonant falls on any other syllable than the last, or when the word ends in two different consonants, the final consonant is not doubled in derivatives formed by the addition of a termination beginning with a vowel: as, daub, daubed, dauber; need, needy; brief, brief'er, brief'est; rev'el, rev'eled, rev'eling; trav'el, trav'eling, trav'eler; profit, profited; act, acted, actor; perform, performer; stand, standing.

The final consonant is doubled in the derivatives of a few words ending in g, in order to diminish the liability to its being pronounced like j, before e or i: as, humbug, humbugged, humbugging; periwig, periwigged. The word woolen is more generally thus written, in the United States, with one l; but in England it is written woollen.

NOTE. — There is a large class of words ending in a single consonant, and accented on some other syllable than the last, the final consonants of which are, by very many writers and lexicographers, doubled in their derivatives, unnecessarily and contrarily to analogy. This practice appears to have arisen from a desire to prevent the vowel of the final syllable of the primitive from being inaccurately pronounced long in the derivatives. These words are chiefly those ending in l, with also a few of other terminations. The following list, the words in which are chiefly verbs, includes the most important of those in regard to which usage varies: namely, apparel, barrel, bevel, bias, bowel, and its compounds, cancel, carburet, and all similar words ending in uret, cavil, carol, channel, chisel, compromit, counsel, cudgel, dial, dishvel, dowel, drivel, duel, empanel, enamel, equal, funnel, gambol, gravel, grovel, handsel, hatchet, imperial, jewel, kennel, kidnap, label, laurel, level, libel, marshal, marvel, medul, metal, model, panel, parallel, parcel, pencil, peril, pistol, pommel, quarrel, ravel, revel, rival, rowel, shovel, shrivel, snivel, tassel, tinsel, trammel, travel, tunnel, unravel, vial, victual, worship. Worcester doubles the final letters of all these words, except parallel, in forming derivatives by the addition of terminations beginning with vowels, though he remarks, with respect to those ending in l, that "it better accords with the analogy of the language" to spell their derivatives with but one l. Smart retains the double consonant in this class of words solely on the ground that usage favors it, but remarks that "the double p in worshipped, worshipper, &c., the second l in travelling, traveller, &c., are quite unnecessary on any other score than to satisfy the prejudices of the eye." Cooley doubles the consonant in a majority of the derivatives of words of this class, but writes a single consonant in many, as in those of apparel, barrel, bevel, channel, drivel, gambol, &c. Perry wrote the derivatives of these words with but one l, according to the rule, and the same practice was advocated by Walker. Conformity to the regular rule has been advocated also by Lowth and other eminent scholars.

§ 138 (9). Derivatives formed from words ending in a double consonant, by adding one or more syllables, commonly retain both consonants: as, ebb, ebbing; odd, oddl'y; stiff, stiffness; fell, fellable; skill, skillful, skillfulness; will, willful, willfulness; dull, dullness; full, fullness. So also the double l is retained in the words installment, inthrallment, thrall'dom, and enrollment (from install, inthrall, thrall, and enroll), in order to prevent the false pronunciation they might receive if spelled with one l. Many writers and lexicographers, especially in England, omit one l in these words, as also in the derivatives of skill, will, dull, and full, formed by adding the syllables ly and ness.

The derivatives of pontiff are exceptions to the rule, being written with only one f; as, pontific, pontifical, pontifical', and the like. One l also is dropped in a few words formed by adding the termination ly to words ending in ll, in order to prevent the concurrence of three l's: as, ill, illy; dull, dully; full, fully. Words similarly formed by adding the termination less, however, are written either with three l's, a hyphen being inserted before the termination, or with two l's and without the hyphen: as, bell-less, or belless, skill-less or skillless, smell-less or smellless.

§ 139 (10). In derivatives formed from words ending with silent e, the e is generally retained when the termination begins with a consonant: as, pale, paleness; hate, hateful; incite, incitement; chaste, chastely, chasteness; move, movement. When, however, the e is immediately preceded by another vowel (except el), it is often dropped from the derivative: as, due, duly; argue, argument; true, truly; awe, awful; and the derivatives and compounds of these words.

The words wholly, nursling, wisdom, abridgment, acknowledgment, lodgment, judgment, and the compounds of some of these, are exceptions. The last four, however, are written, by many authors, abridgement, acknowledgement, lodgement, judgement.

§ 140 (11). In derivatives formed from words ending with silent e, when the termination begins with a vowel, the e is generally omitted, except in the cases mentioned in the next paragraph: as, bride, bridal; guide, guidance; plume, plumage; use, usage; grieve, grievance; come, coming; shape, shaping; move, movable; sale, salable; fleece, fleecy; force, forcible; true, truism.

The e is retained in the word hoeing, shoeing, and toeing (from hoe, shoe, and toe), in order to prevent a doubt as to the pronunciation, that might arise in case it were omitted. It is retained, also, in the words dyeing, singeing, springeing, swingeing, tingeing (from dye, singe, springe, swinge, tinge), to distinguish them from dying, singing, springing, swinging, tinging (from die, sing, spring, swing, ting.) The word mileage, as commonly written, does not omit the e, though it is sometimes, and more correctly, spelled milage. The words lineage, lineal, and pineal, though apparently exceptions, are not really such, since they are derived not directly from line and pine, but from the Latin linea (through the French), linealis, and pineae. The e, standing, in a derivative, before a termination beginning with a or o, and immediately after c or g, is retained in order to preserve the soft sounds of these consonants: as, peace, peaceable; notice, noticeable; manage, manageable; change, changeable; advantage, advantageous; outrage, outrageous; mortgage, mortgageor. The latter word is sometimes very improperly written mortgagor, and pronounced mort-ga-jor.

§ 141 (12). In derivatives formed from words ending in ie, by adding the termination ing, the e is dropped, and the i changed to y, in order to prevent two i's from coming together: as, die, dying; lie, lying; tie, tying; vie, ying.

§ 142 (13). In derivatives of words ending in y preceded by a consonant, and formed by appending any termination except one beginning with i, the y is usually changed into i: as, icy, iciest, icily; mercy, merciless; tidy, tidiness; modify, modifies; foggy, fogginess; earthy, earthiness; pity, pitiful.

The derivatives of adjectives of one syllable ending in y preceded by a consonant, are exceptions, and usually retain the y: as, sly, shyness; sly, slyest; dry, dryly; spry, spryer, spryest; wry, wryness. But the adjectives drier and driest, from dry, are commonly written with i instead of y. Derivatives formed by adding the termination ship, as secretaryship, suretyship, ladyship, and the like, also retain the y, though some authors write them with i, according to the rule. The words babyhood and ladykin are likewise exceptions. The y is also retained in the possessive case singular of nouns, when formed by adding s with the apostrophe: as, country's, everybody's.

§ 143 (14). Derivatives formed by affixing a termination to words ending in y preceded by a vowel, generally retain the y unchanged: as, gay, gayety, gayly; play, player, plays; sway, swayed; obey, obeying; joy, joyful; enjoy, enjoyed; buy, buying; gluey, glueyness.

The words daily, laid, paid, said, saith, stain, and staid (from day, lay, pay, say, slay, and stay), with their compounds, are exceptions. Staid, however, is sometimes written stayed. Derivatives from words ending in uy, as colloquies, from colloquy, are not exceptions to the rule, as u, in such cases, is not strictly a vowel, but stands for the consonant w.

§ 144 (15). Derivatives formed by appending a syllable beginning with a vowel to words ending with a vowel sound, generally retain the letter or letters representing such sound: as, huzza, huzzaed; agree, agreeable, agreeing; weigh, weighing; dough, doughy; echo, echoed; woo, wooes; bow, bowed; beau, beaush.

Derivatives of words of this class ending in silent e, as also those formed from words ending in double e by adding a termination beginning with e, drop the final e: as, hoed, hoed; sue, sued; owe, owed; free, freer, freest; agree, agreed. The cases mentioned in sections 11, 12, and 13 are also exceptions.

§ 145 (16). Derivatives formed by prefixing one or more syllables to words ending in a double consonant commonly retain both consonants: as, tipstaff, rebuff, befall, inthrall, disinthrall, foretell, undersell, fulfill, enroll, emboss, (from staff, buff, fall, thrall, tell, sell, fill, roll, boss).

The word until is an exception, being always written with one l. Those words of this class which end in ll are written by some authors, especially in England, with one l: as, befal, inthal, foretel, fulfil, enrol. The words distill and instill should be written with the l doubled, though they are often written distil and instil, with only one l.

§ 146 (17). Compound words formed by joining two or more words commonly retain all the letters of the simple words: as, stiff-necked, well-bred, dull-eyed, save-all, wide-mouthed.

There are numerous exceptions to this rule, many of them compounds which by long use have acquired the force of single words. They are the following: namely, some compounds of all and well; as, almighty, almost, alone, already, also, although, altogether, always, withal, therewithal, wherewithal, welcome, welfare; — compounds of mass; as, Candlemas, Christmas, Lammas, Michaelmas, &c.; — words of which the second part is the adjective full; as, arful, hateful, rueful, woeful; — also, the words chilblain, fulfill, namesake, neckerchief, numskull, pastime, standish, and wherever.

§ 147 (18). The plural of nouns regularly ends in s, or, in certain classes of words, in es.

When the noun in the singular ends with such a sound that the sound of s can unite with it and be pronounced without forming a separate syllable, s only is added in forming the plural: as, sea, seas; tree, trees; woe, woes; canto, cantos; virtue, virtues; purlieu, purlieus; claw, claws; cab, cabs; panic, panics; bead, beads; chief, chiefs; bag, bags; path, paths; lock, locks; bell, bells; gem, gems; fan, fans; cup, cups; car, ears; act, acts. A few plurals from nouns ending in o preceded by a consonant, end in es: as, echo, echoes; cargo, cargoes; embargo, embargoes; motto, mottoes; potato, potatoes. Other nouns of this class generally form their plurals regularly, though usage differs with regard to some of them. Those in which final o is preceded by a vowel form their plurals regularly. The plural of alkali is written alkalis or alkalis; that of rabbit, either rabbis or rabbies. With regard to other nouns ending in i usage differs, though they are more properly written with the termination is.

When the noun in the singular ends with such a sound (as that of ch, sh, j, s, x, or z) that the sound of s can not unite with it in pronunciation, but must form a separate syllable, e is inserted before s in forming the plural, unless the word ends with silent e, in which case the latter serves to form a separate syllable with s: as, church, churches; rush, rushes; age, ages; lace, laces; gas, gases; box, boxes; maze, mazes.

To express the plural of a letter, figure, or any character or sign, or of a word mentioned without regard to its meaning, the letter s, generally preceded by the apostrophe, is appended, as in the phrases, "The two l's in all;" "Two 's* in Orion;" "The why's and wherefore's of the question." Some writers, however, omit the apostrophe in such cases, joining the s immediately to the letter, character, or word, as in the phrases "The two ls in all;" "Two s* in Orion;" Others still write the names of the letters with their proper plural endings, instead of the letters themselves: as, the two ees, efs, ells, esss, and the like. The plurals of letters are also rarely expressed by simply doubling them, without adding any plural sign: as, the two ee in bee, the two ll in all; but this practice is not to be commended, as ee, ll, &c., are properly read double e, double l, &c.

§ 148 (19). Nouns ending in y preceded by a consonant form their plural by adding es and changing y into i: as, mercy, mercies; lady, ladies; sky, skies; army, armies; pity, pities. This rule includes words ending in quy, in which u, being pronounced like w, is strictly a consonant: as, colloquy, colloquies. The plural of proper nouns ending in y preceded by a consonant, is formed by changing y into ies, according to the rule: as, "The three Maries." Many writers, however, form the plural of such words by simply adding s: as, "The three Marys."

When the singular of a noun ends in y preceded by a vowel (except n having the power of w), the plural is regularly formed by adding s only: as, day, days; key, keys; money, moneys; attorney, attorneys; alloy, alloys; guy, guys. Some plurals of the latter class are often inaccurately written with the termination ies: as, monies, attorneyes, and the like.

§ 149 (20). The plurals of a few nouns ending in f or fe are irregularly formed by changing f or fe into ves. The following words, with their compounds, are the principal examples: namely, life, lives; knife, knives; wife, wives; leaf, leaves; sheaf, sheaves; loaf, loaves; beef, beeves; thief, thieves; calf, calves; half, halves; elf, elves; shelf, shelves; self, selves; wolf, wolves. The plural of staff is sometimes written staffs, but more commonly staves, except when it means a corps of officers, either military or civil, in which sense it is always written staffs. The plural of wharf is generally written wharfs in England; in the United States it is more commonly, but improperly, written wharves, as it is also by some recent English writers. The plurals of hoof and turf, formerly written hooves and turves, are now written hoofs and turfs. The plurals of other nouns ending in f, fe, or ff, are formed regularly by the addition of s only.

§ 150 (21). In the following nouns, the plural is distinguished from the singular only by a change of the vowel or vowel sound of the word: namely, man, men; woman, women; goose, geese; foot, feet; tooth, teeth; brother, brethren; louse, lice; mouse, mice. Compounds ending with these words form their plurals in the same manner: as, foeman, foemen; dormouse, dormice. Words which end in the syllable man, and are not compounds, form their plurals regularly, by adding s only: as, cayman, caymans; desman, desmans; firman, firmans; talisman, talismans; German, Germans; Mussulman, Mussulmans. The plurals of talisman and Mussulman are sometimes, by a gross blunder, written talismen and Mussulmen.

§ 151 (22). A few plurals end in en: namely, brother, brethren; child, children; ox, oxen. To these may be added the obsolete forms eyne, kine, shoon, hosen, housen, (from eye, cow, shoe, hose, house), the first three of which, though they have received a slightly different form, end, as pronounced, with the sound of n.

§ 152 (23). The words brother, die, pea, and penny, have each two plurals of different forms and with different significations: as, brothers, male children of the same parent, also, members of the same society, association, class, or profession; brethren, members of the same religious or ecclesiastical body, the word in this form being rarely used except in religious writings, or in scriptural language, where it also has the same meaning that brother has in ordinary language; dies, implements for making impressions by stamping, or for making screws, also the cubical parts of pedestals; dice, the cubical blocks used in games of chance; peas, seeds of the pea-plant, when a definite number is mentioned; pease, the same in bulk, or spoken of collectively; pennies, the coins, especially when a definite number is mentioned; pence, the amount reckoned by these coins.

§ 153 (24). A few words, mostly names of animals, have the same form in the plural as in the singular: as, deer, sheep, trout, and the like.

§ 154 (25). Many words adopted from foreign languages retain their original plurals: as, datum, data; criterion, criteria; genus, genera; larva, larvæ; crisis, crises; matrix, matrices; focus, foci; monsieur, messieurs.

Many words of this class, while retaining the original plurals, have also a second, formed after the analogy of English words of similar termination: as, formula, formulæ or formulas; beau, beaux or beans; index, indices or indexes; stratum, strata or stratus; bandit, banditti or bandits; cherub, cherubim or cherubs; seraph, seraphim or seraphs. The plurals of the last two words are sometimes incorrectly written cherubims and seraphims, with double plural terminations, from ignorance or forgetfulness of the fact that, in Hebrew words, im is a plural ending.

§ 155 (26). In certain loose compounds consisting of a noun followed by an adjective or other qualifying expression, the plural is commonly formed by making the same change in the noun as when it stands alone: as, court-martial, courts-martial; cousin-german, cousins-german; son-in-law, sons-in-law. When, however, the adjective is so closely joined to the noun that the compound has the force of a simple word, the plural of the compound is commonly formed like that of any other word of the same termination: as, cupful, cupfuls; handful, handfuls.

§ 156 (27). There are many words, besides those mentioned in the preceding paragraphs, in respect to which usage, even that of the best authors, is variable. The most important of these words are mentioned in this and the succeeding sections.

The derivatives of the word villain, as villainous, villainy, &c., though often written villanous, villany, &c., properly retain the i, according to the practice of many writers, like those of other words similarly ending in ain: as, mountainous, from mountain; captaincy, from captain; and the like.

The words connection, deflection, inflection, and reflection follow the spelling of the words connect, deflect, inflect, and reflect, though often written, especially in England, connexion, deflexion, inflexion, and reflexion.

The word woe, though often written without the final e, should retain it, like most other nouns of one syllable and of similar form: as, doe, floe, foe, hoe, sloe, toe, and the like. Monosyllables other than nouns, and words of more than one syllable, having a similar termination, omit the e; as, do, go, no, so, canto, motto, potato.

The words defense, expense, offense, and pretense are properly written thus, though often spelled with c instead of s, for the s belongs to the words from which they are derived, and is also used in all their derivatives.

The words drought and height were formerly written drouth and hight, and are still very often thus written in America.

The verb practice is thus written like the noun, in preference to the form practise, though the latter spelling is used by many writers, especially in England. The difference in spelling between the noun and the verb is properly observed, in words of this kind, only in such as are accented on the last syllable, as device, devise.

Derivatives of the Greek ἔδρα (seat, base, side; pronounced hēd'ra), as polyhedron, tetrahedron, octahedral, and the like, are properly thus written with h before the e of the termination, but are sometimes written polyedron, tetraedron, octaedral, &c., without the h.

§ 157 (28). There is a class of adjectives ending either in able or in ible, of which a large majority have the termination able; as, blamable, laudable, legible, mutable, navigable, rendible. Many of them are from Latin words ending in abilis or ibilis; some are from the French; and not a few are formed by adding the termination to English words. Those from Latin words end respectively in able or ible, according as they are derived from words ending in abilis or ibilis: as, mutable (Lat. mutabilis); credible (Lat. credibilis). Those formed from English words generally end in able; as, avoidable, eatable, laughable, liable, salable, serviceable. There are a few words respecting which usage is variable: as, addible or addable; conversable or conversible; inferable or inferrible; referable or referrible.

§ 158 (29). There is a class of words beginning with en or in, as enclose or inclose, enquire or inquire, ensure or insure, and the like, many of which take either form of the prefix indifferently. They are chiefly derived from the Latin, either directly or through the French, the prefix in belonging to the former language, and en to the latter. In some of these words, en is to be preferred; in others, in; in many of them, either may be used indifferently.

§ 159 (30). There was formerly considerable diversity of usage in respect to the terminations ant and ent, both of which were in certain cases used almost indifferently; as in the words confidant or confident, dependant or dependent, and the like. Present usage, however, is definitely settled in favor of one or the other form, in nearly or quite every word of this class, though not always upon uniform principles. In the few words in which both these terminations are retained, it is the more general practice to write the adjective with ent, and the common noun with ant, while the corresponding abstract noun ends in ence, as in the adjectives confident and dependent, the common nouns confidant and dependant, and the abstract nouns confidence and dependence. In the case of very many words, however, the adjective ends in ant, as also the common noun; while the abstract noun ends in ance, as in the adjectives attendant and repentant; the common nouns attendant and repentant; and the abstract nouns attendance and repentance. It may be remarked that the terminations ant and ance belong properly to words derived from the French or from Latin verbs of the first conjugation; ent and ence to words derived from Latin verbs of the other three conjugations.

§ 160 (31). There is a class of words ending in er, some of which are written by most authors with the termination re; as, center, meter, theater, &c., which are often written centre, metre, theatre, &c. Acre, chancre, lucre, nacre, mas-sacre, and ogre, retain the termination re, in order to preserve the hard sound of the c and g.

§ 161 (32). There are two classes of chemical words ending respectively, as more commonly written, in ide and ine, in regard to which usage has been variable. Most of them were formerly written without the final e; but it is now the almost universal practice to retain it: as, bromide, iodide, chlorine, fluorine, &c. The word tannin is always written without the final e. Oxide is now generally written with the termination ide, though formerly by many written oxyd, from the supposition that the y of the last syllable represented the y of the Greek ὀξύς, from which the word is derived; whereas the last syllable is simply the same as the termination of the words bromide, sulphide, and the like.

§ 162 (33). There is a class of words ending, as pronounced, with the sound of long i, followed by z, some of which are differently written, by different authors, with either ise or ize to represent this sound: as, criticize or criticise; civilize or civilise; naturalize or naturalise; patronize or patronise. These words are mostly verbs, and are chiefly derived from Greek words ending in ιζω, or from French words ending in iser or ise. There are a few from other sources, but formed in analogy with those derived from these languages. Those formed from Greek words have the termination ize; as, anathematize, characterize, dramatize, tantalize. The words catechise and exorcise are exceptions. Those formed in an analogous manner from English words are likewise written with ize: as, albumenize, bastardize, memorize, sensitize. Those derived from the French verb prendre (participle pris or prise) end in ise: as, apprise, comprise, emprise, enterprise, surprise. Of those formed from French words other than prendre, or which have corresponding forms in the French, a majority end in ize, though in respect to some of them usage is variable: as, civilize, formalize, organize, satirize. The following are the principal English verbs ending in ise: namely, advertise, advise, affranchise, apprise, catechise, chastise, circumcise, comprise, compromise, criticise, demise, despise, devise, disenfranchise, disfranchise, disguise, divertise, emprise, enfranchise, enterprise, exercise, exorcise, franchise, maumise, misprise, premise, reprise, revise, supervise, surmise, surprise. It may be remarked that most of those in respect to which usage varies are more frequently written in England with the termination ise, and in the United States with the termination ize.

§ 163 (34). The words mold and molt, and their compounds and derivatives, are written in this Dictionary with o instead of ou, in analogy with the words bold, bolt, colt, gold, &c., from which the u has been dropped. Most authors, however, write these words mould and moult, and their derivatives in like manner.

§ 164. (35). There is a numerous class of words almost universally written, in the United States, with the termination or, many of which are written, in England, with the termination our: as, candor, favor, honor, labor, rumor, vigor. English usage, however, is not uniform with respect to these words, many of them being written with or in English books.

§ 165 (36). There is a small class of words ending with the syllable ped (from Lat. pes, pedis, foot), the termination of some of which was formerly, and is still frequently, written pede: as, biped, centiped, milliped, quadruped, soliped, &c. The words biped and quadruped are universally written without the final e, and the others, according to the best usage, should be written in the same manner.

PREFIXES AND SUFFIXES.

* * * The "Exercises" given below are designed to furnish material for instruction and practice in the etymological analysis of English words. For some remarks as to the mode of using them, see the Preface, p. iv.

PREFIXES.

A, a prefix to many English words, is in some cases a contraction of on, in, at, of, to, for: as, ablaze for in a blaze, aboard for on board, afoot for on foot, aground for on the ground, ado for to do, await for wait for. In other cases, it is contracted from the A.-S. inseparable particle ge-, which forms verbs from verbs, substantives, adjectives, and is a sort of augment to the past participle. In some cases, it only increases the force of the word, without any essential addition of meaning. — In some words of Greek origin, a gives them a negative sense; before a vowel it becomes an. In a few words of Latin origin, it is another form of the prefix ab.

EXERCISE. — Awake, asleep, ahead, aside, afar, awearry; apathetic, amorphous, atheist, abyss, aorist, anonymous, anomaly, anecdote, anarchy; abate, avert.

AB, a prefix to words of Latin origin, and a Latin preposition, is the same as the Greek ἀπό. Goth. af, A.-S. and Eng. of. It denotes from, separation, or departure. Before c and t, it is generally changed into abs. See A.

EXERCISE. — Abduct, abject, abjure, abrupt, abrogate, absurd, abuse, abrade, absolve; abscess, abscond, abstemious, abstain.

AD. [Cf. W. at, to, toward, Goth. and Eng. at.] A Latin preposition, signifying to. In composition, the last letter is usually changed into the first letter of the word to which it is prefixed.

EXERCISE. — Adhere, adjoin, addict, adjure, admit, admonish, adorn, advent, acclaim, aggravate, affirm, allege, applaud, arrogate, ascribe, attain.

AL. 1. In Arabic, an article or inseparable prefix, answering to the Italian il, and the Sp. el. Its use is to render nouns definite, like the English the.

EXERCISE. — Alcove, alchemy, alembic, almanac, alcohol, alkali.

2. A form of the prefix ad. See AD.

AMBI. [Lat. ambi, amb, am, an (as ambidens, ambages, amicire, ambulare), Gr. ἀμφί, A.-S. cmb, ymb.] About; around; — a prefix used in composition in words derived from the Latin.

EXERCISE. — Ambidexter, ambient, ambition, ambiguous; ambelation.

. In this Dictionary, words from foreign languages, both ancient and modern, are usually printed in Italics, though many of them are not ordinarily so printed in other works; as, ADOBE, ADDENDUM, ALIBI.

. Compound words, which in ordinary writing and printing have their constituent parts separated by a hyphen, are here distinguished from those which are usually and properly written and printed without one, by the use of a longer hyphen than that employed for the mere division of words into syllables; as, ALE-HOUSE. Words having prefixes or initial syllables which are commonly separated from other syllables by a hyphen, are distinguished in the same way; as, RE-ENFORCE, ELECTRO-MAGNETIC.

. The syllables -ED; -ING, inclosed within brackets (see Abandon), represent respectively the imperfect tense and past participle, and the present participle — which may in all cases be used as a verbal noun — of regular verbs. In like manner, the syllables -ER; -EST (see Dark) represent the comparative and superlative degrees of regular adjectives. The principal parts of irregular verbs (as Make) and the comparative and superlative of irregular adjectives (as Good) are given in full.

. The figures which immediately follow certain words in the Vocabulary refer to corresponding sections in the Principles of Pronunciation on pp. vii.-xxii., or in the Rules for Spelling, on pp. xxii.-xxvi.

. For the "KEY TO THE PRONUNCIATION," see page vi. It is desirable that those who use this Dictionary should make themselves familiar with the Key, as they will then find it easy to understand the notation by which the pronunciation of every word is expressed.

A DICTIONARY

OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A

A (2-8, 44, 45), an adjective, commonly called the indefinite article, and signifying one or any, but less emphatically. It is a contraction of an, and is substituted for it before all words beginning with a consonant sound, except words beginning with the sound of h and having the accent on any other syllable than the first.

 [Lat. gratificari, fr. gratus, pleasing, and facere, to make.] To please by satisfying some wish; to give pleasure to.
 SYN.—To indulge; humor. — Gratify is the generic term, and has reference simply to the pleasure communicated.
 To indulge a person implies that we concede something to his wishes or his weaknesses which he could not claim, and which had better, perhaps, have been spared. To humor is to adapt ourselves to the varying moods, and perhaps caprices, of others. We gratify a child by showing him the sights of a large city; we indulge him in some extra expense on such an occasion; we humor him, if he is taken ill when away from home.

GRĒAT'LY, adv. 1. In a great degree; much. 2. Nobly.

SYN. — Badly. — In some parts of this country, not by the vulgar alone, but by educated persons, the word badly is used for greatly. Instead of saying, "I wish greatly to see him," they say, "I wish to see him very badly." This is a gross error, and often becomes ridiculous, because the words seem to say of a friend, "I wish to see him in a very bad state of health."

ĪLL'NESS, n. 1. Disease; indisposition. 2. Wrong moral conduct; wickedness; iniquity.

SYN. — Sickness. — Originally sickness was the English term for a continuous disease, as in our version of the Scriptures, &c. Within the present century, there has been a tendency in England to use illness exclusively in this sense, and to confine sickness more especially to a sense of nausea, or "sickness of the stomach;" hence it is there common to say of a friend, "He has been ill for some weeks." "He has had a long illness." This practice is gaining ground in America to some extent; but as the Scriptures, the Book of Common Prayer, and most of the great English writers use "sick" and "sickness" in these cases, it is probable the change will be slow, if ever made.

SYN. — Fancy. — These terms are often confounded, but more properly apply to distinct exercises of the same general power, the plastic or creative faculty. Imagination is the higher exercise; it creates by laws more closely connected with the reason; it has strong emotion as its actuating and formative cause; it aims at results of a definite and weighty character. Milton's fiery lake, the debates of his Pandemonium, the exquisite scenes of his Paradise, are all products of the imagination. Fancy moves on a lighter wing; it is governed by laws of association which are more remote, and sometimes arbitrary or capricious; it has for its actuating spirit feelings of a lively, gay, and versatile character; it seeks to please by unexpected combinations of thought, startling contrasts, flashes of brilliant imagery, &c. Pope's "Rape of the Lock" is an exhibition of fancy, which has scarcely its equal in the literature of any country.

IM-ĀG'I-NĀ'TĪVE, a. 1. Proceeding from, and characterized by, the imagination. 2. Full of images, &c.

IM-ĀG'INE, v. t. [-ED; -ING.] 1. To form in the mind a notion or idea of. 2. To contrive in purpose. 3. To represent to one's self.

SYN. — Contagion. — Medical writers in Europe do not, most of them, recognize any difference between contagion and infection. In America, the distinction referred to under CONTAGION, is, to a considerable extent, admitted. In general literature, this distinction is well established. We use contagion and contagious in respect to things which spread by intercourse or imitation: as, the contagious influence of example; while we apply infection and infectious to a more hidden and diffusive power; as, the infection of vice; the infectious influence of evil principles.

IN-FĒET'TIOŪS, a. 1. Having qualities that may infect; pestilential. 2. Corrupting, or tending to corrupt. 3. Capable of being easily diffused.

IN-GE-NŪ'I-TY, n. 1. Quality or power of ready invention. 2. Curiousness in design.

SYN. — Cleverness. — Ingenuity is a form of genius, and cleverness, of talent. The former implies invention, the latter a peculiar dexterity and readiness of execution. Sir James Mackintosh remarks, that the English overdo in the use of the words clever and cleverness, applying them loosely to almost every form of intellectual ability. Thus they speak of a clever article in a magazine; a clever review; a clever speech in Parliament; of a book very cleverly written; of great cleverness in debate; and, in accordance with this use of language, Macaulay would be called a very clever writer of history, and Fox a very clever debater.

IN-GĒN'U-OŪS, a. [Lat. ingenuus.]

1. Of honorable extraction. 2. Noble; generous. 3. Free from reserve, equivocation, or dissimulation.
